Messenger killed, his arguments thereby grow louder

Ten years ago Richard Barrett's courtroom and publishing careers ended suddenly. This is a reprint from the time of that tragedy.

White eulogy

By Jake Laskey

Hailsa!

After the brutal murder of AWB Leader Eugene Terre Blanche in South Africa, the Nationalist Movement's leader/Attorney Richard Barrett put out a letter in his memory, speaking of Terre Blanche's patriotic acts and "voice of hope and defiance" for the Nationalist Cause, making sure that Terre Blanche would not be forgotten.

That same letter was a call to help Learned, Mississippi, Nationalist Headquarters with security. More recently this headquarters had been broken into and firebombed; however, the police "lacked resources" to investigate.

In Barrett's letter he wrote, "Security is preventive maintenance. I see that even more clearly now. If an engine isn't protected by an oil change, it will blow up. And if the Movement isn't protected with security, a catastrophe is in the offing." He goes on and tells us about the noble deeds of skinheads who have fought in the streets and the courts, who are intelligent and courageous, and the only ones fit to help secure the headquarters in Mississippi from terrorist acts. Thus it was a call to raise funds as "security donors" to move a brother into headquarters.

This letter was dated April 8th, 2010. And the catastrophe has happened! Not in South Africa, but right on our own soil. Richard Barrett was brutally murdered two weeks after his security letter for donations was sent off. Murdered by an incompatible Black, stabbed and beaten; his corpse was set afire on April 21st in headquarters!

I understand that Richard Barrett wasn't liked by the majority of the "Movement" involving skinheads, National Socialists and a slew of connotations proclaiming separatist, supremacist and racist views, etc. He may have looked down on those who preached illegal acts of violence to obtain a Homeland rather than his way of fighting in the courts to gain more rights for activists. Then again those groups, too, printed words in sharp disagreement with and degrading one another.

I know for sure that he helped raise our standards, virtues and morals to better our blood and keep on fighting for what we know is right. Richard Barrett was a real patriot, a Statesman and, like Eugene Terre Blanche, a true Nationalist "voice of hope and defiance." He looked to the youth, to skins, and regularly passed his knowledge and wisdom to us so that we might attain a future for White children and our freedom for a Nationalist New Era.

Running a prisoner outreach program, I was in contact with Terre Blanche while he did time. After I had fallen on federal "hate crime" charges, Richard Barrett stood by and supported me even as others turned their backs. I will miss receiving his personal letters as well as his voice during our discussions those few times we spoke on the phone.

Within one month, our Cause has lost two great men to murderous, primitive savages. Terre Blanche wanted a White Homeland in South Africa, and my friend and comrade Richard Barrett fought for one in America. In Barrett's book The Commission, he wrote this truth: "Nature, not men, decreed that Negroes were different."

Eugene Terre Blanche and Richard

Barrett are martyrs. Their every breath and act was for our race's survival. They did it right. They even died for the White race! What have you done for our noble race? Richard Barrett, my good friend, may you rest today in peace. Your fight was not in vain, and your name is now written in the stars for our future generations. You will never be forgotten. You have become our All-American battle cry.

Hailsa!

The First Freedom was considering a merger with Mississippi Attorney Richard Barrett's All the Way newspaper when he was assassinated by a team of local Blacks last week who simultaneously torched his Nationalist Movement Headquarters in an apparent effort to destroy computers and circulation lists, but backups exist and this newspaper will honor that Crosstar Flag's obligations to its current subscribers.

Richard Barrett's most recent column of January 2010 in The First Freedom had pinned another "Scalawag of the Month" "prestidigitatious" award on one of those who keep pushing efforts to stop Ole Miss students from chanting TSSRA at games and while driving around on campus, but that's not why the usual suspects put these local misfits onto him. No, it's much more serious than his humorous jabs at peecees.

And in the December 2009 TFF issue, when Richard named appointed Ole Miss Chancellor Dan Jones that month's winner, an anti-"Dixie" proponent responded with a post on the "Daily Mississippian" blog ranting: "Die, Barrett. I really mean it."

The just-before-last issue of All the Way dated April 2010 contained typical upbeat articles about skinheads and others never bowing before tyranny; the Nationalist Movement's successful lawsuits causing prison mail rooms to cease interfering with delivery of All the Way; the need to stay off drugs, the affinity between skinheads defending the sovereignty of their people and Moslems who stand up for their own countries; the evils of integration, feminism and sexual perversion; the Ole Miss Rebels disobeying would-be censors by chanting The South Shall Rise Again. These topics pursued relentlessly by Richard Barrett in one successful lawsuit after another had his cowardly enemies on the ropes. Skinhead Smoke Bispham explains what's happening in that April 2010 issue: "They are already coming around to the Nationalist way. (See "White Nationalism," page 4)

HERE’S WHAT WAS IGNORED OR MISREPORTED ELSEWHERE:

TRUMP’S lunatic fringe war cabinet should terrify everyone – comprised of Defense Secretary “Mad Dog” Mattis, hawkish imperial spear-carrier Mike Pompeo at State, generalissimo White House czar John Kelly, geopolitical pyromaniac Nikki Haley as U. N. envoy and now raging hawk John Bolton as national security advisor.

UNICEF director Geert Cappelaere mocks President Donald Trump’s calling billions of dollars in Saudi arms buys “peanuts.” UNICEF, he says, in 2018 for its humanitarian program in Yemen needs $350 million, “peanuts” compared to those billions backing the Saudis’ war.

THE OMNIBUS spending bill was a huge win for the Israel lobby, $1.3 trillion, 2,232 pages – which not one congressman had read before passing. Yet it gives Israel billions of dollars even while defunding the Palestinian Authority. This bill had the full support of both the Republican and Democratic establishments.

JOHN BOLTON as the new national security adviser closes the circle on any remaining hope that the 45th President of the United States would be different from every president having preceded him in recent years regarding foreign policy. A devoted disciple of the “bomb them to hell and ask questions later” school of U. S. politics, Bolton’s hawkish foreign policy credentials are so extreme he makes John McCain look like Bambi by comparison.

BUSINESSES in the Black overrun city of Baltimore keep closing, as an 88 percent increase in commercial robberies there has emerged. Homicides in the 71 percent non-White city surged to a record 343 killings in 2017, which works out at 56 killings per 100,000 people. Baltimore has 615,000 inhabitants. Police attribute the majority of Baltimore’s crime to “gangs, drugs and illegal guns.” Black criminals increasingly fix their attentions upon robbing the city’s remaining commercial businesses.

FAKE intelligence and plagiarized quotations were slipped into an official intelligence report pertaining to Iraq’s WMD presented to the U. N. Security Council by Secretary of State Colin Powell on February 5, 2003. This was used to justify the invasion of Iraq.

CALL THEM “the 9/11 wars” – the seemingly unending destruction of the Middle East and North Africa which has been going on for the last seventeen years. As revealed by General Wesley Clark, these wars had already been anticipated in September 2001.

WESTERN governments are testing their opponents – today Iran, next day the DPRK, then later Russia and China. We are waiting with a sense of dread for the occurrence of a catalytic event that will initiate war. Self-government begins at home. Now is the time to reflect on this warmongering, to understand and reintroduce some common sense, even if it requires such “civil disobedience” as practiced with media-okayed impunity on MLK Boulevard.

IN THE AGE of Stalin and Mao it was ideology that united the two countries, yet today it’s all about positive economics and trade, cooperation in manufacturing, energy and infrastructure. For example, China is investing in a high-speed railway between Kazan and Moscow which will connect many of the metropolitan areas in between those two cities.

ANGRY White British, 3,000 of them, gathered at London’s Speaker’s Corner last month as tens of thousands listened online to famous U. K. activist Tommy Robinson read a pro-European speech that was to have been delivered by the founder of Generation Identity, Martin Sellner. Sellner and a number of Whites, including journalist Lauren Southern, were refused entry into Britain by the U. K. government declaring that he and the other Whites were “a fundamental threat to society.”

HEAD of the European Union mission to Ghana, William Hanna, asks Ghanaians to stop coming to Europe to “beg in malls,” stay home and build their economy. He was at the University of Ghana saying Africans need to “invest in profitable ventures in the country rather than traveling to Europe.”

JEWISH media had to eat humble pie after repeating the ADL’s brazen lie that Jewish school shooter Nikolas Cruz was a “White supremacist.” The ADL is a laughing stock; its “White extremist murder list” includes domestic disputes, Obama and Sanders voters plus mixed race criminals as “White supremacist murderers.” Added ADL rushed into print after the shooting at Florida’s Parkland School claiming Nikolas Cruz was “associated” with some previously unheard of “White supremacist group.”

Hates our “hate symbol”

By Bill Ebb

Kenneth Mayfield, mouthing off in the Tupelo Daily Journal, has shared his ideas about “democracy” with others marching in peecee lockstep against the Confederate battle flag, a “hate symbol.”

The scalawag: “I don’t usually respond to opinions in the Daily Journal, but I thought it proper to address a recent letter on the Confederate flag from a Tupelo outsider. The writer from Blue Springs stated that our elected representatives have a ‘duty to represent and carry out the will of the people that elected him.’ For the most part, this is a true statement, but there are times when the will of the majority is patently wrong. I can think of few historical examples:

“In 1861, the will of the people of the great State of Mississippi was to keep Blacks in slavery. President Abraham Lincoln clearly made a decision that was against the will of the people of Mississippi.

“In 1962, when Gov. Ross Barnett tried to block integration at Ole Miss, President John F. Kennedy sent troops to protect James Meredith. This was against the will of the majority of the White citizens in Mississippi.

“When the Supreme Court of the United States decided that all public schools should be desegregated with all deliberate speed, the vast majority of White citizens of Mississippi opposed that decision.

“When Pontius Pilate asked whether to release Jesus Christ or Barabbas, who was a notorious criminal, the majority chose to have Jesus Christ crucified (Matthew 27:16-18). Does any Christian believe that the will of the majority was the right?... “I applaud those individuals who have

“Be assured that if this new provision [the 14th Amendment] be engrafted in the Constitution, it will, in time, change the entire structure and texture of our government, and sweep away all the guarantees of safety devised and provided by our patriotic Sires of the Revolution.” – Orville Browning
Sec. of the Interior (1867)

ST. PATRICK’S Day, The League of the South took 35-40 Southern Nationalists in to the heart of Antifa territory at Market Square in downtown Knoxville, Tennessee. For three hours on a Saturday morning, not one single piece of Antifa scum showed up to challenge them. In all, they distributed several hundred items of Southern/White Nationalist literature to receptive men and women and had their group photo made in so-called “Antifa Alley.” The League will assemble in Wetumpka, Alabama, for yet another public demonstration on 7 April 2018 and thereafter... who knows? the courage to stand up against racism and bigotry, especially when the ‘will of the majority’ is to continue past racist policies and practices. It is incumbent on our leaders to do what is pleasing in the sight of God, even when the majority disagrees. The flag issue should not be placed on the ballot again. It’s time for our leaders to have the courage to do what is right.”

Slow down, Mr. Mayfield. The leaders need “courage” to go against the wishes of those who elected them? Lincoln isn’t on record as having approved of slavery if the South would remain in his revenue-hungry Union? Zimbabwe is not begging former Whites to return and again run those farms Mugabe confiscated for Blacks to plunder, let fall into ruin and then desert? JFK, born in Massachusetts where the African slaves arrived on mostly Jewish owned ships, was right to ignore the Tenth Amendment when resuming Reconstruction in Mississippi? Federal magistrates need no constitutional authority for likewise seizing from States the qualifying and educating of their own citizens?

Seriously, now

A well respected local surgeon was relaxing on his sofa one evening just after having arrived home from work. As he was watching the evening news, the phone rang. The doctor answered it and heard a fellow doctor colleague on the other end. “We need a fourth for our poker game tonight,” said the friend. “Very well. I’ll be right over,” whispered the doctor. As he was putting on his coat, his wife asked, “Is it serious?” “Oh yes, quite serious,” said the doctor gravely. “In fact, three doctors are there already!”

Race and population policy

This speech by Dr. Gerhard Wagner on Nazi racial policy was delivered at the 1936 Nuremberg Rally. Wagner was the head of the Nazi organization for physicians. Like much other Nazi rhetoric of the period, it put less emphasis on the evils of the Jews than on the benefits of maintaining a racially pure, and growing, population.

By Dr. Gerhard Wagner
renegadetribune.com

The world has been most interested in the policies and actions of National Socialism that have to do with its new approach to the concepts of race and population.

From my experience, one can divide those who respond to the New Germany’s measures in these regards with a lack of understanding, uncertainty, opposition, or even hostility, into several groups.

- One group consists of émigrés and ignoramuses. I group them together because we are going to ignore them. Even the gods fight in vain against ignorance and stupidity, and émigré lies have become so outrageous and tasteless that they find ever fewer gullible listeners abroad.

- Another group consists of scholars and scientists, a group steadily becoming smaller – even abroad – as is clear from the most varied decisions of foreign and international scientific societies that agree with our racial hygiene measures and our genetic policies. We can only say to these learned critics that our genetic and racial thinking stems in the end not from our scientific, but rather from our National Socialist convictions, and that it was not learned scientists, but rather our Führer Adolf Hitler, and he alone, who made genetic and racial thinking the center of our National Socialist worldview and the foundation of the rebuilding of our people’s State. The doctrines of blood and race are not first of all an important and interesting piece of biological science to us, but rather above all else a political-ideological attitude that fundamentally determines our attitudes to things and to the questions of life.

More important than these two groups, however, are those who reject or oppose us because they hold to another worldview.

- Those who base their materialist image of the world on the doctrines of a liberal or Marxist era cannot understand how we can have dethroned their idols of “the economy and Mammon,” replacing them at the center of our National Socialist process of construction and renewal with the German man, with the German people.

- The other groups with a worldview warn their sheep in Christian piety, and in the name of both confessions, of the errors of National Socialist genetic and racial doctrines, and of the errors of the measures taken by the Third Reich. I have this request to those who, in contrast to the Communist and Marxist foreign apostles, overtly and covertly go about their business at home: When you don the worthy priestly robes of either confession and claim that “your kingdom is not of this world,” please concern yourselves with your kingdom and leave to us the responsibility for the kingdom of this world. Allow us to form our German State according to our laws and needs.

My fellow party members, you know the reasons for our National Socialist population and racial policies. We want to rescue a dying people from the edge of the abyss and lead it back to the paths that will lead, according to human reason, to a future in the coming millennium. We must oppose the three great dangers of racial and biological decline that have repeatedly destroyed States, peoples, and cultures in the past if they did not succeed in resisting them in good time. We must therefore contend with these three issues: the decline in the birth rate, the increase in sick and unfit genes in our people, and the mixing of the blood of our people with that of foreign and unrelated peoples, in particular with Jewish blood.

Your “representatives” – forbidden by the Southern Puberty Lechery Center, a federal Affirmative Action Apparatchik and those new voting machines to display such reminders in a building full of judges, lawyers and politicians – have banished the Ten Commandments from Alabama’s Supreme Court now for 175 months.

When I spoke here a year ago about the necessity of a law to protect German blood, none of us imagined that a few days later the Führer would present his people with the brilliant Nuremberg Laws, the “Reich Citizenship Law” and the “Law for the Protection of German Blood and German Honor.” The law to protect German blood created clarity in the Jewish Question, and the Reich citizenship law fulfilled points 4 and 5 of the National Socialist program.

Points 4 and 5 state:
“Only racial comrades may be citizens. A racial comrade can only be someone of German blood, without regard to religious confession. No Jew can therefore be a citizen.”

“He who is not a citizen may live in Germany only as a guest, and must abide by the laws for foreigners.”

The Nuremberg Laws replaced the concept of “citizen of the State” with “citizen of the Reich.” That by itself had only formal significance. It did not by itself realize the demands of the party program.

However, the Nuremberg Laws make further infiltration of Jewish blood into the German national body impossible. To National Socialists, whose racial standpoint is anchored in blood, the wide-ranging scope of this historic decision makes all the other political and economic aspects of laws regarding the Jews of secondary importance.

The Nuremberg Laws would have been incomplete and unfinished had they not dealt with the status of the so-called German-Jewish half breeds, that is, the half and quarter Jews. This bastardized mixed race is not wanted, and the goal of the legislation is to make it disappear – both biologically and politically – as soon as possible. The marriage regulations will lead to that. A quarter Jew may only marry someone of full German blood, and a half Jew, provided he has not chosen to belong to the Jewish religion, or as we prefer, married a Jewish partner and thereby joined the Jewish people, may marry a German only with the permission of the Ministry of the Interior and the Deputy Führer [Rudolf Hess’ office].

It came as no surprise to us, indeed it was what we expected, that the Nuremberg Laws were a welcome occasion for the Jews and their allies to scream about the “German barbarians.” It is not worth the time to look into all these varied complaints. Our handling of the Jewish question is a matter of domestic German policy, but we do hope that many of our foreign Olympic guests were able to see for themselves how badly things are going for the “Poor Jews” in terrible Nazi Germany.

To those who think that our regulations on the marriage of half Jews in Germany are unreasonable – or depending on their attitudes, inhumane or unchristian – I can only say that if the Church can demand celibacy of hundreds of thousands, we believe before God and our consciences that it is good for our German people for us to forbid 200,000 half Jews to marry Germans.

I can well understand those German racial comrades who want to refuse any mixture of foreign Jewish blood at all, and who cannot understand the marriage regulations of the Nuremberg Laws that permit marriage to quarter Jews. To them I say that we have confidence that our 67 million people will be able to absorb the 100,000 quarter Jews – there are no more than that – without significant damage.

But those who believe that the Jewish question has been fully resolved in Germany by the Nuremberg Laws must know that the battle goes on. World Jewry itself is seeing to that. We will be victorious only when each German racial comrade knows that it is a matter of our very existence. The party’s educational and training work seems to me more necessary than ever before, since even some party comrades see these matters as no longer relevant or important.

People are always saying that our National Socialist racial thinking is materialistic, unchristian, chauvinistic, imperialistic, and that it leads to the defamation of foreign races and peoples. The opposite is the case. We believe that our racial policy is the surest guarantee for mutual respect and peaceful coexistence between peoples of this world. Someone of another race is different from me both in body and soul, for both are important.

This makes no value judgment about other races. We are too conscious of the relationship between our own blood and our own race to presume to make such a judgment, which could only come from a standpoint that thought itself above race and humanity.

Scientifically, the differences between races and peoples are incontrovertible. That is the foundation, the justification, and also the obligation of any racial policy, without which, according to our view, Europe and the whole world can never be at peace. National Socialism would never use military action to forcibly take over Nations or populations that differ from us in blood and soul, since they would forever remain foreign elements within our State. We therefore reject chauvinism and imperialism, since we grant to other races on this earth the same right we claim for ourselves, namely the right to form our own life and environment according to the necessities and laws of our nature. Racial policy is thus to us a policy of peace.

Finally, a word to those who reject our racial policy as “unchristian.” God has chosen to create humanity in the form of various races, as he has done in all of the rest of nature. Those who ignore race and its laws are not acting in a Christian manner, but rather we claim to be following the will of God, who has created the various racial types of this world so that each may maintain the greatest possible racial purity that will enable it to develop its particular strengths.

I turn next to the second process of biological decline that has long been evident in our people: an improper selection that has neglected the most valuable elements in an almost criminal manner while providing for and supporting the inferior with endless resources.

The millions and billions that we have spent in the past, and the about one billion

Germany today is back in Jewish hands

marks that we sacrifice today for the care of the genetically ill, is a squandering of our national resources that we National Socialists cannot justify when we consider the needs of the healthy population. Healthy working class families with numerous children today earn only enough for the necessities of life, which means that it is irresponsible that the State must provide the money for some genetically ill families who may have several family members in institutions costing thousands of marks annually.

The National Socialist State cannot repair the failings of the past, but through the “Law for the Prevention of Genetically Ill Offspring,” it has seen to it that in the future the inferior will not be able to produce more inferior children, saving the German people from a steady stream of new moral and economic burdens resulting from genetic illnesses.

I discussed these matters in greater detail at the last two party rallies, so I will here respond only to several objections that have been made that might worry or concern harmless and gullible souls, though the objections are outbalanced by constantly growing praise from the whole world.

To those who claim that we act in an unchristian way, sinning against the will of God, we reply that we are convinced that we are acting consistent with the will of the Creator when we prevent unhealthy life from being propagated, saving children and their children from new and enormous misery. The Creator himself established the laws of life, which harshly and brutally let all that is unworthy of life perish to make room for the strong and healthy to whom the future belongs. This is necessary for the preservation and development of all that lives on this earth.

Even more absurd is the objection that our law on the sterilization of the genetically ill permits their sterilization without their explicit consent. We think it would be ridiculous to allow the genetically ill, who may lack intelligence – as with the feeble- (See “Resurgence,” page 7)

Will Russia wake up?

By Paul Craig Roberts
paulcraigroberts.org

Russians are having a difficult time comprehending their Western enemy or even understanding that Russia has an enemy that seeks the destruction of Russia.

Has it ocured to Russia that it is very strange that the U. K., a country of no military significance, a country that could be completely destroyed forever in a few minutes by Russia, would concoct false charges against the Russian government, announce these charges publicly without providing any evidence whatsoever, bring the unsupported charges to the U. N., issue an ultimatum to Russia, dispel Russian diplomats and seize Russian assets on the basis of mere allegations, all the while refusing any evidence and any cooperation with Russia, as required by law, in the investigation of the charges?

Russians, both government, media and youth brainwashed by American propaganda and the Washington-funded NGOS that the Russian government allows to operate against itself in Russia, seem to think the many accusations and threats issued against Russia are some kind of mistake that can be rectified by recourse to evidence and law.

Apparently, after all these years, the Russians still do not understand that Washington and its vassals have no interest whatsoever in facts or law.

At the U. N. the Russian ambassador, in response to the evidence-free accusation by the U. K. prime minister that the Russian government had used a military-grade nerve agent to attempt to kill two people on an English park bench, went through all the legal reasons, including the requirement of collaboration with Russia in examining the evidence, to establish that the U. K. accusation was in violation of law and unsupported by any evidence.

Why do the Russians think the British government cares a hoot about law or evidence? Are the Russians really this brainwashed about the West?

Words become deeds

The British government of Tony Blair cooperated with the George W. Bush regime in propagating the lie that Saddam Hussein in Iraq had “weapons of mass destruction.” This lie was used to invade and to destroy Iraq and to leave the country 15 years later in chaos.

The British government also supported the lies about Gaddafi in Libya and participated in overthrowing the Libyan government. The British government also supported the lie that Iran had a nuclear weapons program. There was never any evidence, but evidence was of no interest. An agenda was in motion, and the agenda was independent of evidence.

Mendacious momentum

Although the British Parliament voted down British participation in Obama’s planned invasion of Syria, the current British government supports the lie that Assad is using chemical weapons “against his own people.” By now one would think that Russians, both government, media and public, would understand that all the West is capable of is to lie. The purpose of the lies is to demonize Russia and to set up Russia for military attack.

But somehow Russians can’t get the message. Russians think it is all some kind of mistake that facts, legal processes and diplomacy can clear up. “Please just listen to us, we can clear up the misconceptions!” As if the West cares. Washington wants “the misconceptions.”

That is why Washington creates them.

Today’s momentum

The inability of Russians to understand the West, which Russia stupidly wants to join, is the reason that World War 3 is near at hand.

What if, instead of reciting the legal process and the law governing it that the U. K. PM refused to follow before publicly accusing Russia without the presentation of any evidence, the Russian U. N. Ambassador had simply said: “If the U. K.

Russia no longer pays much attention to hostile statements like the one made by U. K. Defense Secretary Gavin Williamson, who said Moscow should “go away and shut up,” Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov said.

He chided the 41-year-old British official for his remarks made in reference to the ongoing standoff between London and Moscow over the poisoning of a former Russian double agent in Britain.

Just playing the game

“He is a nice young man. He probably wants to get a place in history by making bold statements,” he suggested. “[U. K. Prime Minister] Theresa May now has ‘highly possible’ as her main argument backing Russia’s alleged guilt. He has ‘Russia should go away and shut up.’ Well, I don’t know. Maybe he lacks upbringing.”

Lavrov said he cannot recall a time in

Trump fires Freemasons and Jews

Mr. Orange has been busy recently. Fortunately the revolving door at the White House was not only oiled early that morning to prevent any fire hazard but an electrical system has also been installed so that all of D.C. is now being powered by the rotation caused by these incoming and outgoing Freemasons and Jews.

By relying on law, about which no Western country gives a hoot, the Russian U. N. ambassador permitted Washington’s French puppet and other of Washington’s European puppet States to say that they supported the British charges against Russia despite the absence of evidence. Perhaps the Russians noticed that none of those European governments required any evidence that Russia was responsible. All that was required was the accusation.

In the exceptional, indispensable Western World ruled by Washington, accusation alone is proof of Russian mendacity. When British Labour Party leader Jeremy Corbyn asked PM May if she actually had any real evidence that Russia had tried to kill the former British double-agent, Corbyn was shouted down not only by the corrupt Conservatives but also by members of the Labour Party that he heads. How much more evidence does Russia need that facts are not important to the West?

The Russian government simply does not understand that Washington regards Russian appeals to diplomacy, law, facts, evidence, as signs of extreme weakness and lack of confidence. Why South Carolina seceded

aloe910@aol.com

This month, I am again submitting what I believe is an important piece of our Southern heritage in honor of Confederate History Month. I was hoping to raise my banner announcing that historic celebration on my centrally-located building in downtown Atkinson this year, but the building went on the auction block March 20th for unpaid property taxes. I had a hearing on the 19th to prevent the sale by striking the notice of sale as being in violation of the rules of procedure. Knowing as we do the propensity of the judiciary to go along with the paradigms of government propaganda, I do not expect to win this one. Nothing portrays this political truism better than South Carolina’s very convincing and legally correct Declaration of War. As always, “Might Makes Right!” God’s will be done.

Declaration of war

Here we see the true cause for South Carolina’s secession from the United States of America: The Northern States’ disregard of the agreed to restrictions contained in the United States Constitution. Nothing could be plainer – The United States had become antagonistic to its own founding document and enemy to the Southern States, especially South Carolina. There can be no doubt that the cause of South Carolina, and ultimately the cause of the twelve other Southern States in the Confederacy, was righteous and correct.

It appears historically that the issue of slavery was well on its way to a peaceful resolution, but the United States’ careless disregard of the property rights of members of the Southern States, and blatant failure to adhere to the tenets of the Constitution described in the following Declaration of War, absolutely justified the actions of the sovereign State of South Carolina. We need all to remember these words as we again celebrate Confederate History Month.

The United States is now reaping the harvest of its illegal actions following this Declaration. The ultimate result is the apparently unstoppable collapse of these forcibly reunited States of America into a cesspool of Third World immigrants as each becomes just another part of “The Planet of the Apes,” similar to the member States of sub-Saharan Africa.

Declaration of the immediate causes which induce and justify the secession of South Carolina from the Federal Union

The people of the State of South Carolina, in Convention assembled, on the 26th day of April, A.D. 1852, declared that the frequent violations of the Constitution of the United States, by the Federal Government, and its encroachments upon the reserved rights of the States, fully justified this State in then withdrawing from the Federal Union; but in deference to the opinions and wishes of the other slaveholding States, she forbore at that time to exercise this right. Since that time, these encroachments have continued to increase, and further forbearance ceases to be a virtue. And now the State of South Carolina having resumed her separate and equal place among Nations, deems it due to herself, to the remaining United States of America, and to the Nations of the world, that she should declare the immediate causes which have led to this act. In the year 1765, that portion of the British Empire embracing Great Britain, undertook to make laws for the government of that portion composed of the thirteen American Colonies. A struggle for the right of self-government ensued, which resulted, on the 4th of July, 1776, in a Declaration, by the

Colonies, “that they are, and of right ought to be, FREE AND INDEPENDENT STATES; and that, as free and independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do.” They further solemnly declared that whenever any “form of government becomes destructive of the ends for which it was established, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government.”

Deeming the Government of Great Britain to have become destructive of these ends, they declared that the Colonies “are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.” In pursuance of this Declaration of Independence, each of the thirteen States proceeded to exercise its separate sovereignty; adopted for itself a Constitution, and appointed officers for the administration of government in all its departments – Legislative, Executive and Judicial. For purposes of defense, they united their arms and their counsels; and, in 1778, they entered into a League known as the Articles of Confederation, whereby they agreed to entrust the administration of their external relations to a common agent, known as the Congress of the United States, expressly declaring, in the first Article “that each State retains its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every power, jurisdiction and right which is not, by this Confederation, expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled.” Under this Confederation the war of the Revolution was carried on, and on the 3rd of September, 1783, the contest ended, and a definite Treaty was signed by Great Britain, in which she acknowledged the independence of the Colonies in the following terms:

“ARTICLE 1 – His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the said United States, viz: New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, to be FREE, SOVEREIGN AND INDEPENDENT STATES; that he treats with them as such; and for himself, his heirs and successors, relinquishes all claims to the government, propriety [property] and territorial rights of the same and every part thereof.”

Thus were established the two great principles asserted by the Colonies, namely: the right of a State to govern itself; and the right of a people to abolish a Government when it becomes destructive of the ends for which it was instituted. And concurrent with the establishment of these principles, was the fact, that each Colony became and was recognized by the mother Country as a FREE, SOVEREIGN AND INDEPENDENT STATE.

In 1787, Deputies were appointed by the States to revise the Articles of Confederation, and on 17th September, 1787, these Deputies recommended for the adoption of the States, the Articles of Union, known as the Constitution of the United States. The parties to whom this Constitution was submitted, were the several sovereign States; they were to agree or disagree, and when nine of them agreed the compact was to take effect among those concurring; and the General Government, as the common agent, was then invested with their authority. If only nine of the thirteen States had concurred, the other four would have remained as they then were – separate, sovereign States, independent of any of the provisions of the Constitution. In fact, two of the States did not accede to the Constitution until long after it had gone into operation among the other eleven; and during that interval, they each exercised the functions of an independent Nation. By this Constitution, certain duties were imposed upon the several States, and the exercise of certain of their powers was restrained, which necessarily implied their continued existence as sovereign States. But to remove all doubt, an amendment was added, which declared that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

On the 23rd of May 1788, South Carolina, by a Convention of her People, passed an Ordinance assenting to this Constitution, and afterwards altered her own Constitution, to conform herself to the obligations she had undertaken. Thus was established, by compact between the States, a Government with definite objects and powers, limited to the express words of the grant. This limitation left the whole remaining mass of power subject to the clause reserving it to the States or to the people, and rendered unnecessary any specification of reserved rights. We hold that the Government thus established is subject to the two great principles asserted in the Declaration of Independence; and we hold further, that the mode of its formation subjects it to a third fundamental principle, namely: the law of compact. We maintain that in every compact between two or more parties, the obligation is mutual; that the failure of one of the contracting parties to perform a material part of the agreement, entirely releases the obligation of the other; and that where no arbiter is provided, each party is remitted to his own judgment to determine the fact of failure, with all its consequences. In the present case, that fact is established with certainty. We assert that fourteen [actually 16 – Ed.] of the States have deliberately refused, for years past, to fulfill their constitutional obligations, and we refer to their own Statutes for the proof. The Constitution of the United States, in its fourth Article, provides as follows: “No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up, on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.” This stipulation was so material to the compact, that without it that compact would not have been made. The greater number of the contracting parties held slaves, and they had previously evinced their estimate of the value of such a stipulation by making it a condition in the Ordinance for the government of the territory ceded by Virginia, which now composes the States north of the Ohio River.

The same article of the Constitution stipulates also for rendition by the several States of fugitives from justice from the other States. The General Government, as the common agent, passed laws to carry into effect these stipulations of the States. For many years these laws were executed. But an increasing hostility on the part of the non-slaveholding States to the institution of slavery, has led to a disregard of their obligations, and the laws of the General Government have ceased to effect the objects of the Constitution. The States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, have enacted laws which either nullify the Acts of Congress or render useless any attempt to execute them. In many of these States the fugitive is discharged from service or labor claimed, and in none of them has the State Government complied with the stipulation made in the Constitution. The State of New Jersey, at an early day, passed a law in conformity with her constitutional obligation; but the current of anti-slavery feeling has led her more recently to enact laws which render inoperative the remedies provided by her own law and by the laws of Congress. In the State of New York even the right of transit for a slave has been denied by her tribunals; and the States of Ohio and Iowa have refused to surrender to justice fugitives charged with murder, and with inciting servile insurrection in the State of Virginia. Thus, the constituted compact has been deliberately broken and disregarded by the non-slaveholding States, and the consequence follows that South Carolina is released from her obligation.

The ends for which the Constitution was framed are declared by itself to be “to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.” These ends it endeavored to accomplish by a Federal Government, in which each State was recognized as an equal, and had separate control over its own institutions. The right of property in slaves was recognized by giving to free persons distinct political rights, by giving them the right to represent, and burdening them with direct taxes for three-fifths of their slaves; by authorizing the importation of slaves for twenty years; and by stipulating for the rendition of fugitives from labor. We affirm that these ends for which this Government was instituted have been defeated, and the Government itself has been made destructive of them by the action of the non-slaveholding States. Those States have assumed the right of deciding upon the propriety of our domestic institutions; and have denied the rights of property established in fifteen of the States and recognized by the Constitution; they have denounced as sinful the institution of slavery; they have permitted open establishment among them of societies, whose avowed object is to disturb the peace and to purloin the property of the citizens of other States. They have encouraged and assisted thousands of our slaves to leave their homes; and those who remain, have been incited by emissaries, books and pictures to servile insurrection. For twenty-five years this agitation has been steadily increasing, until it has now secured to its aid the power of the common Government.

Observing the forms of the Constitution, a sectional party has found within that Article establishing the Executive Department, the means of subverting the Constitution itself. A geographical line has been drawn across the Union, and all the States north of that line have united in the election of a man to the high office of President of the United States, whose opinions and purposes are hostile to slavery. He is to be entrusted with the administration of the common Government, because he has declared that that “Government cannot endure permanently half slave, half free,” and that the public mind must rest in the belief that slavery is in the course of ultimate extinction. The Nuremberg trials were a “high-grade lynching party,” said Harlan Fiske Stone, Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court

“In all seriousness the Soviets, with the concurrence of the American, British and French judges, had the audacity to rebuke the Germans for having carried out deportations and used concentration camps or forced-labor camps!”

After Germany’s defeat in WWII, the Nuremberg and later trials were organized primarily for political purposes rather than to dispense impartial justice. Wear’s War – wearswar.wordpress.com – brings to you each week a quote from the many fine men and women who were openly appalled by the trials. All of these people were highly respected and prominent in their fields, at least until they spoke out against the trials.

After 1941 the Allies conspired to invent the Great Stalin Myth and expunge from public memory all recollection of what was known concerning him and the horrific scale of atrocities still being perpetrated under Stalin at that time in the Soviet Union.

French revisionist Dr. Robert Faurisson: “At Nuremberg the victors tried the vanquished; they were thus both judge and party to the case; they had decided beforehand that, if necessary, one would do without real evidence:

“The Tribunal shall not be bound by technical rules of evidence... The Tribunal shall not require proof of facts of common knowledge but shall take judicial notice thereof...” (Articles 19 and 21 of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal)

“Moreover, the victors’ justice violated the usages of normal justice in ignoring the separation of powers (some of those who took part in the drafting of the Charter went on to become judges and prosecutors), instituting collective responsibility (any member of a group declared ‘criminal’ was automatically considered a criminal himself), implementing retroactivity of laws and denying those convicted any possibility of appeal. No representatives of the neutral Nations were among the judges and prosecutors.

“In all seriousness the Soviets, with the concurrence of the American, British and French judges, had the audacity to rebuke the Germans for having carried out deportations and used concentration camps or forced-labor camps! Resorting to an additional specification of Article 19 of the Charter, the Soviet prosecutor got the judges to refuse any serious investigation of the crime in Katyn Forest imputed to the Germans. Soviet archives, their contents analyzed for the first time, reveal that claims of atrocities leveled at captives during Nuremberg’s theater-trials were of Soviet doing. Meantime, the media continue to recycle “Nazi confessions” obtained through torture despite evidence of Soviet not German culpability.

There is not a shred of evidence admissible in any conventional court that Hitler’s Germany produced vehicles for gassing prisoners. There is no such uncertainty over the origins, however, of that dreadful innovation, as gassing vans have since proven to be of NKVD origin.

The Soviet Union’s Narodny Komissariat Vnutrennih Del – or People’s Commissariat of Internal Affairs (NKVD) – was a Secret Police division set up by Wall Street financed Bolsheviks. Its stated purpose was to liquidate by all means possible millions of “surplus” Russians and Central Europeans.

The head of the NKVD was Nikolai Yezhov. The Lithuanian Jew and self-confessed shirt-lifter (homosexual) was a 4’11” dwarf. An insatiable killer, Nikolai Yezhov was dubbed “the Iron Commissar.” NKVD officers were awarded various prizes based on numbers of victims and extremes of brutalities used. Not once has this mass killer’s identity been revealed by the Western media until now.

During the 1930s NKVD officer Isay Berg was charged with the execution of prisoners ordered by the NKVD (court) troika of Moscow Oblast. Following each conviction, the normal procedure was to transport prisoners to mass graves of Butovo for execution by shooting. When three troikas (courts) were concurrently in grabbing by the Allies of Germany’s silver, gold, platinum, jewelry, securities, properties, banks, museums, scientific and industrial patents and if, to cap it all, one notes that the Nuremberg trials of German leaders earned the description, by some, of ‘a farce’ or, in the words of Harlan Fiske Stone, Chief Justice of the United States session the graveside killers experienced difficulty in dealing with the large numbers delivered for execution.

Great Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn is undoubtedly the most credible historian to have chronicled the terrible decades of Bolshevik suppression. It was the Bolsheviks, not the Reich, that murdered on an industrial scale.

The former Gulag prisoner writes: “The gas wagon was invented and used by the Soviet secret police NKVD in the late 1930s during the Great Purge. The vehicle had an air-tight compartment for victims, into which exhaust fumes were transmitted while the engine was running. The victims were gassed with carbon monoxide, resulting in death by monoxide poisoning and suffocation.”

The gas van’s 1936 designer was Isay Davidovich Berg, the Jewish head of the administrative and economic department of the NKVD of Moscow Oblast. These vans manufactured in the local Ford-built plant were the means of suffocating prisoners in batches with engine fumes while en route to the mass graves at Butovo where prisoners were subsequently buried.

The decision of one food bank in the western city of Essen to stop signing up more foreigners after migrants gradually became the majority of its users has prompted a storm of reaction in Essen, a former coal town in Germany’s rust belt, and across the country.

This move highlights an uncomfortable reality. Three years after Germany took in more than a million refugees, the burden of integrating those newcomers has fallen on the poorest, whose neighborhoods have changed and who compete for subsidized apartments, school places and, in the case of the food bank, a free meal.

Supreme Court, a ‘high-grade lynching party,’ one can only find it deplorable that, for 66 years, our schools, universities and media have ceaselessly been telling us that, during the last world war, the victors represented Good and the vanquished, Evil.”

EDITOR’S NOTE

This article is based on Germany’s War, by John Wear, available from American Free Press for $29 postpaid anywhere in C. S. A. or U. S.

The second Five Year Plan began in 1932: Stalin also began his bloody war against peasants, which was called collectivization. Units of the Red Army would herd peasants and their families into railroad cattle cars and transport them to Siberia, the Urals, or Kazakhstan, where they were thrown out into the cold on the bare steppes. This operation was ordered by Stalin and executed by his deputy Molotov. Many years later, when Molotov was asked how many people were transferred during collectivization, Molotov answered: “Stalin said that we relocated ten million. In reality, we relocated twenty million.”

The Soviet collectivization of 1932-1933 alone is estimated to have resulted in 3.5 million to 5 million deaths from starvation, and another 3 million to 4 million deaths as a result of intolerable conditions at the places of exile.

Solzhenitsyn says: “Berg’s method was to strip the victims naked, tether them, plug their mouths and throw them into a closed truck. Each van was disguised from the outside as a bread van. During transportation exhaust gases were piped into the body of the van. When delivered to the farthest (execution) ditch those arrested were already dead.

It was Berg’s suggestion that these vehicles were of the widely used GAZ-AA truck chassis (licensed American model Ford AA truck 1929). In October 1931 a Model AA was the first vehicle produced at Ford’s own new Dagenham plant in England. Ford licensed the manufacture of the Model A and AA to a variety of Nations, notably the Soviet Union. More than 985,000 GAZ AAs were built in the USSR from 1932 to 1950.

Those poor Germans who normally use the food bank all support the move by its head, Jörg Sartor, to halt handouts to the foreigners.

Ask any of the Germans lined up outside the former water tower that houses the food bank and they will call Sartor a “people’s hero.”

“He stands up for us,” said Peggy Lohse, 36, a single mother of three. Until recently, groups of young migrant men had sometimes elbowed their way to the front of the line, Lohse recalled. She went home empty-handed more than once. Some older women were so intimidated that they stopped coming altogether, she said.

Resurgence from the Versailles death sentence

minded – or free will – as in the case of the mentally ill – to make this decision, particularly since we already control their use of money and other dead things. It would be absurd to leave them with far more important decisions on procreation and children.

As for you critics from the Communist-Marxist camp, we refuse your right to judge whether we are acting correctly when we prevent inferior life as long as you promote the unlimited right to abortion when the growing life is valuable, whenever the mother, a doctor or someone else wishes it.

I believe that we have a good conscience before the world when we eliminate life that is unworthy of life, particularly when we see everywhere that the poisonous seed of Communism is senselessly slaughtering thousands of valuable people.

But the National Socialist State is interested in more than merely preventing the spread of unfit genes. Just as important, indeed even more important, are the measures that aim to care for and promote the Nation’s valuable genes.

The most important measure since the last party rally is the “Law for the Protection of the Genetic Health of the German People” of 18 October 1935. As a “healthy marriage act,” it returns marriage to its real purpose – producing healthy children. It provides for careful marriage counseling to ensure that people will marry only if it can be expected that their children will be healthy – genetically healthy.

A large number of other measures promote health and physical ability, maintain the military and productive readiness of the German people, and advance these by all possible means.

The duty of the State is to protect the people’s health through legal measures, and to ensure that these policies are implemented. The task of the movement is to win the support of the people for these government policies, and to reestablish the sense of responsibility people have toward themselves, their families and their people. The rights and necessities of the whole people supersede the right of the individual to his own body.

The State is responsible for ensuring health, the party is responsible for providing leadership in the area. The two reinforce and support the same goal: the maintenance and improvement of the strength of the German people.

Successful leadership in the area of health is primarily in the hands of the approximately 20,000 expert physicians with a reliable worldview who are organized in the Office for People’s Health. They are the foundation of the confidence which must exist between those who will lead and those who are to be led. We do not believe this confidence develops in the offices of State physicians, but rather only in personal contact between the individual citizen and a doctor whom he trusts. Our ideal, therefore, is not based on the laws, regulations and rulings of experienced State doctors, but rather in the German people’s doctor, the old family doctor, who respects nature and knows how to use its healing powers – which have often been criminally ignored in the past. Of course he also understands the methods of academic medicine. Since he understands racial hygiene, he will never forget the people as a whole when he treats the individual. Prevention is more important to the doctor than healing! He wants to be a faithful aide not only in time of sickness, but also a counselor and a friend when someone is healthy. He is happier with a child who runs toward him with joy than with the most interesting and perhaps the most lucrative sickness.

I know that confidence in the German doctor suffered in many places in the past. I know that a comprehensive restructuring of a profession does not happen overnight, but rather requires a reasonable time. But I also know that an ever growing number of our German doctors are conscious of the great responsibility they have in the front lines of the battle for the strength and preservation of our people’s blood, the most valuable treasure we possess, and the one thing that – once lost – can never be regained.

History teaches us in the long run peoples are not destroyed by economics or politics, by natural catastrophes, wars or inner struggles, but rather the last and ultimate cause behind every people’s decline throughout history has a biological foundation that broke its strength and health. Many peoples have suffered heavy blows, including huge costs in living racial comrades, yet recovered within a few generations because their fertility was unharmed and their will to life remained healthy and strong. How often have healthy children sprung from the wombs of a defeated people and grown to become avengers and liberators who led their people to new greatness and to new triumphs.

Strength and health are given but once to a people, and, once lost, they can never be regained, unlike destroyed cities and ruined fields.

In this regard, it is valuable to look at conditions in the Russian Soviet Union.

Although for understandable reasons it is not reported in official statistics and reports, various announcements and newspaper articles make it clear that heath conditions in Russia are becoming more and more catastrophic.

Communist Pravda writes on 24 February 1936: All the hospitals in Moscow were built over 20 or 30 years ago. No major repairs have been made for decades. The ceiling and walls of the department of infectious diseases were last painted in 1925. Hospitals are constantly short of needles, smocks, hand towels, as well as body and hand soap. In the leading Moscow model clinic, the bedding is tattered and the mattresses, as in most hospitals, are entirely worn out.

Pravda of 7 July 1935 complains about criminal conduct against the health of workers and provides distressing numbers about illnesses resulting from unhealthy working conditions at the Moscow factory for measuring instruments during the first half of the year 1934.

It is also striking that, according to a report from Louis Fisher in the Neuer Tagebuch in 1936, the number of births in Moscow has steadily declined in recent years from 30.7 to 15.3, that is by more than half, and the number of abortions has increased by a factor of six. It is one and a half times as large as the number of births.

These reports make it clear that the Russian leaders have allowed unbelievable damage to be done to their people’s health that will have bitter consequences for this people and for its military strength. To these Russian Communist leaders, their people are only puppets in the battle for power, be that a struggle between various Jewish cliques or the struggle to establish Communist-Jewish world domination. The well-known Franciscan priest and sociologist Duffee, who is certainly not guilty of any great love for Germany, wrote in the New York Times of 14 July 1936 that he had come to the conclusion, after six years of research, that Communism was only a facade for international capitalism. [Duffee was a Catholic high school teacher, not a particularly well-known scholar, and the NYT article mentioned was actually dated 12 July 1936.] We can only hope, in the interests of humanity, that this knowledge spreads more and more throughout the world.

My party comrades, we must understand that all the measures of our population policy that I have already described to you only make sense when the corresponding population is at hand, and the birth rate is sufficient to keep the population at the necessary level.

The German people grew from 42 million to 67 million between 1870 and today, not through an increase in the birth rate but only because the death rate constantly fell, resulting in an increase in the average life span. Aside from the fact that this shift leads to an undesired increase in the average age of the population, the death rate cannot go on falling forever, since we cannot abolish death and illness.

If the birth rate of the last decade were to continue – between 1900 and 1933, the annual number of births fell from two million to one million, which means it has fallen by half – a substantial decline in Germany’s population would over time be inevitable. The German Office of Statistics estimates that the population of the German Reich would fall to about 47 million by the year 2000, and continue to fall thereafter, until another, stronger people would move into the empty space and our Germany would vanish from history like the old Greeks and other cultures of the past.

You know that since the takeover of power, there has been a happy improvement in the catastrophic population decline that had until then prevailed. The number of marriages, which had fallen to 517,000 in 1932, rose to 639,000 in 1933, 739,000 in 1934, and 651,000 in 1935.

The number of births per thousand reached its lowest point in 1933 at 14.7, or 971,000. In 1934 it rose for the first time in a long while to 1,197,000, or 18 per thousand, an increase of about a quarter. Despite a substantial decline in the number of marriages, the number of births rose again to 1,261,000, or 18.9 per thousand of the population. That is a very good situation that we can be more than proud of, since it shows unexpected and unrequested confidence in the government leadership and in the political and economic future.

Still, those voices both at home and abroad – I remember, for example, a recent article in Mussolini’s paper Popolo d’Italia – are premature in drawing the conclusion that the German people has already resolved its population crisis. Aside from the fact that a birth rate of 20 per thousand is necessary to maintain our population, a figure that we have not yet reached, we have to expect a significant reduction in the number of marriages in coming years, which is the result of a not insignificant decline in the war and postwar generations that are now reaching marrying age. Thirty years of a declining birth rate have cost Germany around 13 million unborn children. From the standpoint of racial hygiene, a particularly painful and serious loss is the 3 to 3.5 million unborn children who would have been born to the best of our people, those who remained on the field of honor. They now would have been married and had children, the mothers and fathers of a strong generation that is now missing.

The statistics of the first quarter of 1936 show that the declining marriage rate of 1935 is continuing. There were 10.4% fewer marriages than in the first quarter of 1935. At the same time, the statistics also prove the very happy fact that, just as last year, the decline of the birth rate has not been parallel to the decline in the marriage rate. It fell by only 1.4%, a bit less than last year.

All of our efforts and policies must aim at maintaining these favorable birth statistics, and strengthening them.

The critical question is whether we can succeed in reaching an average of three to four live births per marriage. Only that will guarantee the survival of our people. The duty of the State is to provide legal and especially economic measures to equalize the burdens that today fall particularly heavily on families with many children. The task of the movement will continue to teach the people through a powerful campaign of education and enlightenment that the path to the future leads through a generation of healthy children, a generation large enough to maintain – and if necessary defend – what their parents and ancestors have won and created. The deepest causes of the decline in the birth rate are not economic. They are spiritual, they are rooted in the hostile attitude of the past era to families and children. If we do not succeed in changing this internal attitude of the German people, all our population policy efforts – however generous they may be – will be useless and without hope.

Only when the German people join its powerful political will to self assertion to a determined affirmation of its will to life, to the maintenance of its population both in number and in kind, will it guarantee its military strength, its freedom, its honor and its future for all time.

“Though this be madness, yet there is method in it.” (Polonius – Shakespeare)

Yes, there is method and purpose in such madness, concerning Germany especially. Only a people suffering from mental illness will accept the holocaust lore and pay billions as atonement. After the “glorious victory” by the United States over Germany, America then handed Germany over to the Jews. (Patton opposed that and was accidented.)

Weimar “republic” returns

Jews received licenses to restart the newspapers, along with control over the radio and nascent TV industry. Radio and TV, however, were not important since the Germans had obligingly turned in all their radios. TV didn’t exist; no Germans at that time had one. In 1945, Orwell’s 1984 had become the reality for Germans having turned in all their weapons. In the attic we had a decorative saber that we forgot to hand over and I remember how scared we were in case our small house was searched.

Since our previous teachers were in the Nazi party, they were not allowed to teach, old geezers coming out of retirement as replacements. All our Nazi school books were assigned to oblivion. Before any new books could be printed, we had to write everything down by hand. I remember

The Boer Project: A new Swedish documentary covers the unfolding crisis in South Africa.

By Kyle Hunt
renegadetribune.com

Jonas Nilsson is a Swedish man who has lived in South Africa for years and decided to crowdfund a documentary about the crisis taking place there. It was released for free last month from Palaesta Media. The documentary features a lot of interviews where Boers speak frankly about how the White minority has been disenfranchised, vilified, tortured and murdered, to the point where they are now facing all-out genocide. Many have been preparing for full-scale civil war.

Facts seldom touched upon

Some people featured in the documentary and others who have been covering the topic of South Africa elsewhere, such as Simon Roche of the Suidlanders and Lauren Southern, are obvious controlled opposition. Many of these so-called advocates for White South Africans are trying to get the Boers to surrender their lands without a fight and are calling on Western countries to accept them as refugees.

Let us be clear, the Boers are the rightful owners of their land. If people knew South African history, which is not taught to us (at least not properly), they would know that no sub-Saharan Black Africans were even present in South Africa when it first saw waves of White settlers. The only people at the time there were the light-skinned Khoisans, who have also faced persecution under Black rule. The Black getting writers cramp especially in biology. Anybody having had a government job was dismissed, including my aunt who was a social worker.

“Whose bread I eat, his song I sing.” As the victors (read: Jews) were dispensing that bread, most Germans began blabbing their song (again, speak Jews). Bread may taste sweet, but changing rational thought among a people to irrational schizophrenia takes time, a process I now see completed. German defense minister von der Leyden, naturally a woman, wants to eliminate all songs the German soldiers sang during the Nazi period, most of them having nothing to do with war or politics.

What will such a German government eliminate next? Maybe they’ll tear up the Autobahn, since it was a Hitler project.

“Just shut up”

In France, Le Monde wrote (2/21/1979): “It is not necessary to ask how technically such a mass murder was possible. It was technically possible seeing that it took place. That is the required point of departure of every historical inquiry on this subject. This truth it behooves us to remember. In simple terms: There is not and there cannot Africans only flooded into South Africa after Whites had built up a prosperous country, and benefitted greatly from it.

We should never see ethnic cleansing and genocide as acceptable or inevitable. We should be doing whatever we can to bolster the defenses of White South Africans, who could easily win militarily though vastly outnumbered, this by bringing international attention to the crisis. The South African government is committing genocide against Whites in South Africa, and Donald Trump has not said a word about it.

Since our governments in the West are actively committing genocide against their White populations, we can only expect them to allow this travesty to take place without so much as even a condemnation.

It is therefore up to us to raise awareness ourselves and then take action. Renegade Films has a great documentary available that shows the real history of the country and all of the Jews who’ve worked with Communist terrorists to create this anti-White hell. The political climate in South Africa since the ANC took over the country’s political leadership after the 1994 apartheid system has changed drastically.

South Africa has gone from a civilized country with a European standard of living, a stable and secure country, to one that is now facing major political uncertainties. This means that the population lives under constant concern for the future, which makes it difficult for one’s own investment therein.

I have a half-brother in Germany. He is a virtue signaler. In the nineties he marched with a candle to protest hostility against foreigners. The cleverest ruse of the Jewish dominated media is to use the innate good will of people against them. Opening the European border was done in the name of benevolence. “We have to help these poor, persecuted asylum seekers,” echoed those virtue signalers, never realizing that they had opened their borders to an additional invasion.

Reconstructed

Back to my half-brother. He is a great admirer of Angela Merkel, disses on the German philosophers but loves the Jewish, communistic philosopher Popper’s dictate: No tolerance for intolerance. That is an oxymoron – a figure of speech in which opposite or contradictory ideas or terms are combined. In a word, it is schizophrenic.

I write letters on behalf of persecuted revisionists, but have received a reply only once. I translate: “Dear Mrs. Miller: After reading your letter of March 26, I asked myself if I should throw it into the waste paper basket, or take time for a short reply. deny the Holocaust (it being a crime), the speaker in Germany has to expect legal prosecution. Your writing leaves no doubt that you question the Jewish genocide committed by the Nazi regime.

“I am very happy to notice that your opinion belongs only to a negligible minority.

“Sincerely yours, Herbert Quelle, Consul General, Federal Republic of Germany.”

Diagnosis

My feelings: Herbert Quelle, Consul General, Federal Republic of Germany, is politically correct, but in today’s Germany that means suffering from schizophrenia.

In January 2018 Monika Schaefer flew to Germany to attend the trial of Sylvia Stolz, after having produced a video in Canada titled: “Sorry Mom, I was wrong about the holocaust.” During the trial against Stolz the Judge decreed a break, at which time a No Tolerance for Intolerance crew arrested Monika and escorted her to the Stadelheim prison in Munich, knowing Canada’s government no longer possesses the power or will to protect its own citizens from illegal arrest.

And why was Sylvia Stolz on trial? She had given a talk in Thun, Switzerland, about the present day legal system in Germany. I listened to her talk; it was excellent. Not with one syllable did she mention the Holocaust. But the German prosecutor guessed her thoughts, namely, that she is a nonbeliever, a heretic. Welcome to the new Germany and its resurrection of the mad inquisition.

to form a family or not. Among the biggest challenges ahead will be maintaining an environment that is sufficiently stable, and predictable enough, so that one perceives an opportunity to be able, as well as dares, to raise children.

Survival of the fittest

However, the South African minority population faces more than just a directly political uncertainty.

In parallel with today’s fierce political climate, there is also greater concern for a future genocide – similar to what we saw in Zimbabwe against the White farmers, a genocide that was realized through the country’s agricultural reforms.

Strong voices are heard within the South African establishment to carry out their own agricultural reforms, motivated by a discourse aimed at the Blacks to “reclaim what is rightfully theirs.” This discourse fires up the already existing farm attacks, which are now so numerous and bestial in their executions that the Genocide Watch organization already warns about a future racial extermination, and has placed the situation of the Boer residents as acute.

Whatever it takes

In this respect, the situation of residents is beyond “uncertain” and “unpredictable.” They feel confident in their analysis of such a State, and thus also know what to expect. As a result, we can see non-State actors formed to fill the void that should be guaranteed through the State system, a social security network, e.g., as provided by help organizations and security through neighboring watches.

Why Americans go killing potential friends everywhere

The Pentagon and Hollywood’s propaganda alliance creates wars and rumors for ever more of them.

By Michael McCaffrey
rt.com

The Pentagon helps Hollywood to make money and, in turn, Hollywood churns out effective propaganda for the brutal American war machine.

The U. S. has the largest military budget in the world, spending over $611 billion – far larger than any other Nation on Earth. The U. S. military also has at their disposal the most successful propaganda apparatus the world has ever known... Hollywood.

Since their collaboration on the first Best Picture winner “Wings” in 1927, the U. S. military has used Hollywood to manufacture and shape its public image in over 1,800 films and TV shows. Hollywood has, in turn, used military hardware in their films and TV shows to make gobs and gobs of money. A plethora of movies like “Lone Survivor,” “Captain Philips,” and even blockbuster franchises like “Transformers” and Marvel, DC and X-Men superhero movies have agreed to cede creative control in exchange for use of U. S. military hardware over the years.

In order to obtain cooperation from the Department of Defense (DoD), producers must sign contracts that guarantee a military approved version of the script makes it to the big screen. In return for signing away creative control, Hollywood producers save tens of millions of dollars from their budgets on military equipment, service members to operate the equipment and expensive location fees.

This understood, it’s for free

Captain Russell Coons, director of the Navy Office of Information West, told Al Jazeera what the military expects for their cooperation: “We’re not going to support a program that disgraces a uniform or presents us in a compromising way.”

Phil Strub, the DoD chief Hollywood liaison, says the guidelines are clear. “If the filmmakers are willing to negotiate with us to resolve our script concerns, usually we’ll reach an agreement. If not, filmmakers are free to press on without military assistance.”

In other words, the Department of Defense is using taxpayer money to pick favorites. The DoD has no interest in nuance, truth or – God forbid – artistic expression; only in insidious jingoism that manipulates public opinion to their favor. This is chilling when you consider that the DoD is able to use its financial leverage to quash dissenting films it deems insufficiently pro-military or pro-American in any way.

The danger of the DoD-Hollywood alliance is that Hollywood is incredibly skilled at making entertaining, pro-war propaganda. The DoD isn’t getting involved in films like “Iron Man,” “X-Men,” “Transformers,” “Jurassic Park III” for fun. They are doing so because it’s an effective way to psychologically program Americans, particularly young Americans, not just to adore the military but to worship militarism. This ingrained love of militarism has devastating real-world effects.

Lawrence Suid, author of Guts and Glory: The Making of the American Military Image in Film, told Al Jazeera, “I was teaching the history of the Vietnam War, and I couldn’t explain how we got into Vietnam. I could give the facts, the dates, but I couldn’t explain why. And, when I was getting my film degrees, it suddenly occurred to me that the people in the U. S. had never seen the U. S. lose a war, and when President Johnson said we can go into Vietnam and win, they believed him because they’d seen 50 years of war movies that were positive.”

Jingo Manual

As Suid points out, generations of Americans had been raised watching John Wayne valiantly storm the beaches of Normandy in films like “The Longest Day,” and thus were primed to be easily manipulated into supporting any U. S. military adventure because they were conditioned to believe that the U. S. is always the benevolent hero and inoculated against doubt.

This indoctrinated adoration of a belligerent militarism, conjured by Hollywood blockbusters, also resulted in Americans being willfully misled into supporting a farce like the 2003 Iraq War. The psychological conditioning for Iraq War support was built upon hugely successful films like “Saving Private Ryan” (1998), directed by Steven Spielberg, and “Black Hawk Down” (2001), produced by Jerry Bruckheimer, that emphasized altruistic American militarism. Spielberg and Bruckheimer are two Hollywood heavy-weights considered by the DoD to be their most reliable collaborators.

Another example of the success of the DoD propaganda program was the pulse-pounding agitprop of the Tom Cruise blockbuster “Top Gun” (1986). The movie, produced by Bruckheimer, was a turning point in the DoD-Hollywood relationship, as it came amid a string of artistically successful, DoD-opposed, “anti-war” films like “Apocalypse Now,” “Platoon” and “Full Metal Jacket,” which gave voice to America’s post-Vietnam crisis of confidence. “Top Gun” was the visual representation of Reagan’s flag-waving optimism, and was the Cold War cinematic antidote to the “Vietnam Syndrome.”

Artificial respiration

“Top Gun,” which could not have been made without massive assistance from the DoD, was a slick, two-hour recruiting commercial that coincided with a major leap in public approval ratings for the military. With a nadir of 50 percent in 1980, by the time the Gulf War started in 1991, public support for the military had spiked to 85 percent.

Since Top Gun, the DoD propaganda machine has resulted in a current public approval for the military of 72 percent, with Congress at 12 percent, the media at 24 percent, and even Churches at only 40 percent. The military is far and away the most popular institution in America. Other institutions would no doubt have better approval ratings if they too could manage and control their images in the public sphere.

It isn’t just the DoD that uses the formidable Hollywood propaganda apparatus to its own end... the CIA does as well, working with films to enhance its reputation and distort history.

For example, as the “War on Terror” raged, the CIA deftly used “Charlie Wilson’s War” (2007) as a disinformation vehicle to revise their sordid history with the Mujahideen in Afghanistan and to portray themselves as heroic and not nefarious.

The CIA also surreptitiously aided the film “Zero Dark Thirty” (2012), and used it as a propaganda tool to alter history and convince Americans that torture works.

The case for torture presented in “Zero Dark Thirty” was originally made from 2001 to 2010 on the hit TV show “24,” which had support from the CIA as well. That pro-CIA and pro-torture narrative continued in 2011 with the Emmy-winning show “Homeland,” created by the same producers as “24,” Howard Gordon and Alex Gansa.

Sorta true

A huge CIA-Hollywood success story was Best Picture winner “Argo” (2012), which ironically is the story of the CIA teaming up with Hollywood. The CIA collaborated with the makers of “Argo” in order to pervert the historical record and elevate their image.

The fact that this propaganda devil’s bargain between the DoD/CIA and Hollywood takes place in the self-declared Greatest Democracy on Earth™ is an irony seemingly lost on those in power who benefit from it, and also among those targeted to be indoctrinated by it, entertainment consumers, who are for the most part entirely oblivious to it.

If America is the Greatest Democracy in the World™, why are its military and intelligence agencies so intent on covertly misleading its citizens, stifling artistic dissent and obfuscating the truth? The answer is obvious... because in order to convince Americans that their country is The Greatest Democracy on Earth™, they must be misled, artistic dissent must be stifled and the truth must be obfuscated.

In the wake of the American defeat in the Vietnam war, cinema flourished by introspectively investigating the deeper uncomfortable truths of that fiasco in Oscar-nominated films like “Apocalypse

Now,” “Coming Home,” “The Deer Hunter,” “Platoon,” “Full Metal Jacket” and “Born on the Fourth of July,” all made without assistance from the DoD.

Political brothel

The stultifying bureaucracy of America’s jingoistic military agitprop machine is now becoming more successful at suffocating artistic endeavors in their crib. With film-making becoming ever more corporatized, it is an uphill battle for directors to maintain their artistic integrity in the face of cost-cutting budgetary concerns from studios.

Hollywood uses “American Sniper” to destroy history and create myth.

In contrast to post-Vietnam cinema, after the unmitigated disaster of the U. S. invasion of Iraq and the continuing quagmire in Afghanistan, there has been no cinematic renaissance, only a steady diet of mendaciously patriotic, DoD-approved, pro-war drivel like “American Sniper” and “Lone Survivor.” Best Picture winner “The Hurt Locker” (2008), shot with no assistance from the DoD, was the lone exception that successfully dared to portray some of the ugly truths of America’s Mesopotamian misadventure.

President Eisenhower once warned Americans to “guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military industrial complex.”

Eisenhower’s prescient warning should have extended to the military industrial entertainment complex of the DoD/CIA-Hollywood alliance, which has succeeded in turning Americans into a group of uniformly incurious and militaristic zealots.

America is now stuck in a perpetual pro-war propaganda cycle, where the DoD/CIA and Hollywood conspire to indoctrinate Americans to be warmongers and, in turn, Americans now demand more militarism from their entertainment and government. Wash. Rinse. Repeat.

The DoD/CIA-Hollywood propaganda alliance guarantees Americans will blindly support more future failed wars and will be willing accomplices in the deaths of millions more people across the globe.

On the 4th day of March next, this party will take possession of the Government. It has announced that the South shall be excluded from the common territory, that the judicial tribunals shall be made sectional, and that a war must be waged against slavery until it shall cease throughout the United States. The guaranties of the Constitution will then no longer exist; the equal rights of the States will be lost. The slaveholding States will no longer have the power of self-government, or self-protection, and the Federal Government will have become their enemy.

Sectional interest and animosity will deepen the irritation, and all hope of remedy is rendered vain, by the fact that public opinion in the North has invested a great political error with the sanction of more erroneous religious belief.

We, therefore, the People of South Carolina, by our delegates in Convention assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, have solemnly declared that the Union heretofore existing between this State and the other States of North America, is dissolved, and that the State of South Carolina has resumed her position among the Nations of the world, as a separate and independent State; with full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do.

The Chinese invasion

American Dissident Voices
Broadcast of September 2, 2000
By Dr. William L. Pierce
nationalvanguard.org

If you have listened often to my broadcasts, you probably have heard me say more than once that we must oppose the enemies of our people only by legal means at this time: that no matter how much we are tempted to ignore this warning, and no matter how morally justified violence or illegality may be, we must swallow our rage and restrain ourselves. And the reason we must not resort to illegality is simply that we cannot win an armed conflict against the government: the disparity in forces at this time is too great; we are too heavily outgunned. Sometimes, however, the temptation becomes almost overwhelming.

Imagine this hypothetical situation: an enemy Nation – Red China, say – launches a surprise attack on the United States. With precision nuclear missile strikes the enemy forces take out our centers of command and control all across the United States. At the same time Chinese immigrants in America execute a plan which has been carefully prepared in conjunction with Blacks, Asians, Mexican mestizos, homosexual groups and feminist and leftist leaders to begin rioting in every American city, tying up local police forces and paralyzing local traffic and communications.

Just a few hours after the missile strike and at the height of the confusion and disorder 100,000 trained and armed Chinese cadres cross the border into Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California from dozens of concealed bases in Mexico and begin fanning out toward America’s urban centers in fast-moving, motorized columns. All that was required for that operation was a few million dollars in bribes for corrupt Mexican officials to let the Chinese assemble in their camps south of the border and wait quietly for the signal to move. As a thousand or so of the Chinese cadres, all of whom speak English, arrive in each urban center they quickly occupy all police and government buildings.

Collaboration

In some areas – California, for example – the Chinese Reds are welcomed with open arms and handed the keys to the cities by the local politicians. In other places the element of surprise, combined with their ruthless use of firepower and the cooperation of Chinese agents already in place, quickly gives the upper hand to the Chinese. Within 36 hours they have established a network of control across the whole country. Hundreds of thousands of other Chinese cadres then begin disembarking from transport ships whose arrival at U. S. ports has been timed carefully.

Orders go out from the Chinese to the leaders of the rioters in the cities to stop the looting and burning immediately. Acting on instructions from the Chinese, the politicians go on television and tell the American people that they can go back to work, that an international operation had been necessary to restore order, that the temporary unpleasantness is over and that there have been fewer than a million casualties.

Within the next few days the American people are reassured repeatedly on television by well known sports figures and Hollywood celebrities that everything is back to normal. The shopping malls are open, the welfare checks are being mailed out, all of the ball games and soap operas and other entertainment shows are being broadcast on their regular schedules, and people can go anywhere they want and do anything just as before – with a couple of minor exceptions: citizens in possession of firearms or ammunition have 72 hours to turn them in at the nearest police station, no questions asked; and “hate speech” is henceforth prohibited. Citizens in possession of any books or other printed or electronically recorded materials which might be considered to be “hateful” should take them to their nearest police station immediately. Specific guidelines will be published later, but for now “hate speech” is anything which is sexist, homophobic, or racist – especially anything which may be construed as anti-Chinese. An “800” telephone number is displayed continuously at the bottom of television screens which viewers can call at any time to report persons they suspect of having firearms or “hate speech” materials.

Back to here and today

Now, this imaginary scenario I have described is greatly oversimplified. Even with the advanced missile technology the Israelis recently sold to the Chinese after stealing it from us, crippling the ability of the United States to respond to a Chinese attack would not be so easy, nor should we believe that America’s various anti-White minorities can be so easily organized and coordinated as I have described. Anyway, unrealistic or not, I just want you to imagine this scenario for a moment and then ask yourself the question: How should a patriot respond to such a situation? How should you respond?

Should you behave in the way I have urged you to behave under the actual circumstances which prevail in America today, and abstain from any violent or illegal activity? Should you obey the orders issued by the Chinese occupation authorities, on the grounds that they have you outgunned? You would understand the seriousness of the situation, of course. You would understand that having abolished the First and Second Amendments, the Chinese occupiers eventually would eliminate any other vestiges of American freedom which might get in their way.

In discussing the situation with your neighbors, you certainly would hear the argument that Americans really hadn’t lost anything and that it was a good thing the Chinese had come. You would be told that the First Amendment was never intended to protect “hate speech” and that the recent riots by minorities were proof that we needed to be more careful not to let people say or write “offensive” things that just made it harder for all of us to live together peacefully in a multicultural society. As for the Second Amendment, just look at all the people who had been shot while attempting to protect their property from looters during the rioting. If no one had been allowed to have a gun, those people would still be alive – robbed and raped, perhaps, but still alive. Yes, it was a good thing the Chinese had come and rounded up the guns and outlawed “hate speech.” Now we would all be safer, and life would be more pleasant.

No sticks, knives, stones?

And, of course, that is exactly the line everyone is hearing from the media. The TV celebrities and sports stars and politicians are saying just what most of your neighbors are saying – which, with the exception of the occasional references to the Chinese, is pretty much what they were saying before the Chinese came: namely, that the First Amendment really doesn’t give anyone the right to say things that might hurt the feelings of other people or cause social friction; and that the Second Amendment is just about government-regulated militias – it doesn’t really give private citizens the right to have firearms.

Dissenting fines doubled

One new thing on television is the reports of people arrested for “hate speech” – namely, for saying “hateful” things against the Chinese occupation authorities. The media commentators talk about these “hate criminals” with the same disapproving tone of voice and facial expressions one might expect them to use when talking about serial killers or child molesters. Judges are setting bail at more than a million dollars and telling the media that they intend to deal in the harshest possible way when it comes to people charged with “hate speech.”

So, again, what should you do? If you obey the laws, what can you do? As a normally peaceful, non-violent sort of person, your natural inclination is to try to rouse people against the Chinese takeover of America. You feel an urge to stand on the street corner and shout, “Hey, folks! Wake up! We’ve been invaded! Our liberty is being taken away from us! Let’s organize and chase the Chinese out of our country!” But if you try that you’ll be arrested. The media will denounce you as a “hater.” Most of your neighbors will say it serves you right, that they want no “haters” in their community. Some local Christian minister will form a “committee of reconciliation” to undo the damage your “hate” has done to Chinese-American relations, and the local church ladies will hold a candlelight vigil for the same purpose. And you will have accomplished nothing.

For guidance you turn to historical precedents of resistance to an occupation government. You think about the French underground, the so-called “Resistance” during the Second World War. They assassinated some German soldiers and carried out some sabotage of German military equipment, but much more than that they terrorized their own countrymen in order to make them afraid to collaborate with the Germans. If a French judge ordered the punishment of a Frenchman for an offense against the Germans, then that judge might be assassinated by the Resistance. Of course, it was after the German forces had left France at the end of the war that the Resistance really went to work, murdering thousands of Frenchmen who had been accused of collaboration.

Court of last resort

Certainly, when you see some judge on the TV news announcing that he intends to be especially hard on anyone committing a “hate crime” against the Chinese occupation, you feel an overwhelming conviction that he deserves to be assassinated: that he deserves to be shot down by a sniper as he leaves his home in the morning; that he deserves to have his legs blown off by a bomb when he turns on his automobile ignition, that he deserves to have someone in a crowded shopping mall brush by him and shove a knife into one of his kidneys. And you feel the same way about the media commentators and the sports stars and the Hollywood celebrities and the politicians who also are telling the public that it is right to punish people for “hate speech” against the Chinese. You are absolutely certain that killing any and all of these collaborators is morally justified. You are convinced that if they are not killed and others who might be inclined to collaborate are not made afraid of collaborating, America will be lost forever.

But what do you actually do? Certainly some other patriots will fight beside you, but you are still outgunned by the Chinese and their collaborators, because it is clear that most of your fellow Americans are simply lemmings in the grip of television propaganda, and that whoever controls the propaganda will control the lemmings. Do you begin assassinating judges and politicians and preachers anyway, because it is the right thing to do from a moral and patriotic standpoint? Or do you fight in some other way?

Okay, back to the real world now: no Chinese takeover, just America as we know it today. But you know, the questions we just asked are not academic. The Chinese invasion was imaginary, but the decisions faced by patriots in that scenario will be all too real very soon. The project now at the top of the agenda of every major Jewish organization in America and of their collaborators in the Clinton government is the outlawing of what they call “hate speech.” They will deny it if you confront them; they will say, “Oh, we are the biggest supporters of civil rights in America. America has been the land of opportunity for us, and we appreciate more than anyone else the freedom we have here. We especially believe in free speech.” But that is simply a lie. They know that if they openly announced that they are in favor of abolishing the Bill of Rights so that White Americans cannot oppose their plans for America, they would have trouble. The lemmings and the politicians and the preachers and the soccer moms would go along, of course, but the independent-minded minority would raise hell. So the people who want to criminalize Politically Incorrect speech lie and go about reaching their goal by indirect means.

“Protection Racket” warning

I’ll read you an excerpt from a letter sent last week by the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles to politicians and liberal leaders all over Germany. “I am writing to you directly to request your immediate action to correct the business practice of barnesandnoble.com of selling hate literature in the Federal Republic of Germany. Recently a researcher working in Germany for the Simon Wiesenthal Center ordered the following titles via barnesandnoble.com: Mein Kampf, The Protocols of the Elders of Zion, The Turner Diaries, and Hunter. Further, barnesandnoble.com then solicited our researcher to buy an additional five books, including White Power, authored by the late notorious head of the American Nazi Party, George Lincoln Rockwell. Among the other books proposed for sale is Serpent’s Walk, published by the virulent hate group, the National Alliance.”

This attempt by the Wiesenthal Center to prevent the sale of certain books in Germany is of some interest to me because my company, National Vanguard Books, distributes every one of the titles that the Wiesenthal Center indicated in its letter that it wants banned. Furthermore, I am the publisher of four of the titles, and I wrote two of them myself. The fact is that the Wiesenthal Center and other Jewish groups have been working openly in Germany to accomplish the same thing they are doing in a sneakier and more deceptive way in America.

They succeeded years ago in pressuring Germany’s politicians into enacting laws criminalizing Politically Incorrect speech – that is, to make Germans subject to arrest and prosecution for saying or writing anything the Jews don’t like.

Politically Incorrect books cannot be published or sold in Germany, but the Jews are complaining now that Germans still are able to purchase my books on the internet through major American distributors such as Barnes and Noble and amazon.com. Actually they already pressured amazon.com a couple of months ago into halting its internet sales of Mein Kampf to German customers. But that was just the camel’s nose under the tent, to use an apt expression. Having succeeded in outlawing all speech in Germany they don’t like, they are working now on making it impossible for Germans to purchase any of the books I publish or distribute, including works of fiction, such as my novels.

Germany is just an example. The Jews behave in essentially the same way in every country in Europe. Everywhere they have pushed for bans on so-called “hate speech,” and, having gotten those bans, they then have pushed to expand them to cover every sort of speech they don’t like. And they are trying to do in America exactly what they have done in Germany and elsewhere. They will lie to you about it, but, believe me, the Jews in Europe are the same Jews we have over here. They have the same aims, and they work together. The Jews and their feminist and homosexual and liberal collaborators in America do want to abolish both the First and Second Amendments to the U. S. Constitution – for a starter.

Subversion

I have in front of me a news item from last week. It’s datelined August 23, from the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. The first line of the story is, and I quote: “Jewish groups are joining in a last-ditch effort to push through federal hate crimes legislation before the 106th U. S. Congress is history.” The article lists a number of the Jewish organizations pushing for the new “hate crime” laws, and all of the big ones are there: the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress, the Anti-Defamation League of B’nai B’rith, Jewish War Veterans, Jewish Council for Public Affairs, Jewish Labor Committee, National Jewish Democratic Council, Jewish Women International, Women’s Zionist Organization of America, et cetera.

And, lest you think that what the Jews have in mind is simply a new federal law against lynching, I’ll read to you from an article which appeared the very next day in the very Jewish Washington Post. This is datelined August 24, and the headline reads: “Hate Crime Charged in Defacing of Statue.” The first line of the story is, and I quote: “Annapolis police have arrested a man and charged him with hate crimes in connection with the desecration of a statue of renowned Black legislator Aris T. Allen.” To summarize the rest of the story, a 36-year-old Maryland man is accused of placing a white pillowcase over the black statue’s head. The pillowcase had eye cut-outs, so that it looked like a Ku Klux Klan hood. The accused also is said to have used duct tape to attach small Confederate flags to the statue’s hands.

Now, to ordinary folks like you and me that may sound like the sort of childish prank that might lead to a vandalism charge. But, believe me, it’s no prank to the “hate speech” crowd. They want blood. Look at the word the Washington Post writer used: “desecration.” A White man puts a pillowcase over the head of a Black statue, thereby failing to show the solemn respect owed to the Black statue by all Whites, and it’s not only “desecration”; it’s also a “hate crime,” with all sorts of additional penalties. I’m not joking, the full story is in the August 24 issue of the Washington Post.

Ominous coalition

I’ll be talking much more in the future about this Jewish campaign to abolish our Bill of Rights. I’ll give you many more specific examples. For now, just take my word for it: the Jews and their feminist-homosexual-minority allies are working day and night to condition the American people to accept “hate speech” laws of the same sort they have succeeded in imposing on most other White countries, so that

U. S. senators tell Europe where to get gas

And, being full of it themselves, they’re quite expert on the subject.

rt.com

A group of Republican and Democratic senators is urging the White House to use all options to block the building of the Nord Stream 2 pipeline, aimed at delivering natural gas from Russia to Germany.

“We write to express our concern about the continuing development of the Nord Stream 2 pipeline that would carry natural gas from Russia to Germany. We oppose Nord Stream 2 and urge the administration to utilize all of the tools at its disposal to prevent its construction,” lawmakers wrote in a letter to Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and Deputy Secretary of State John Sullivan, as cited by Sputnik.

The letter, first seen by the Washington Examiner, warns the U. S. government over probable monopolization of European energy markets. According to 39 U. S. senators who signed the document, the project, implemented by Russia’s State-run firm Gazprom and its partners represents a setback in Europe’s attempts to diversify its gas supplies. The pipeline allegedly makes the U. S. more susceptible to Russian coercion and influence.

“For too long, European Nations have been held hostage to Russian political pressure on a whole host of issues due to their dependence on Gazprom to deliver gas needed to keep their people warm throughout the winter,” the letter reads.

“The best way to guarantee Europe’s long-term economic health and independence is to enable and support investment in a variety of energy sources, suppliers and routes to meet Europe’s needs and to force Gazprom to negotiate as a market actor and not a monopolist,” the senators wrote.

Al Gore already has told them openly that he’s for it, and you can bet your bottom dollar that George Bush will tell them the same thing secretly if he wants to be elected. And, as long as they can keep the ball games coming and the shopping malls full, the majority of the American people certainly

Facebook sells user data

rt.com

On March 17, NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden tweeted that Facebook is a “surveillance company” that sells its users’ personal details, weighing in on a scandal involving a private firm that harvested data from the social media giant.

Truth will out

“Businesses that make money by collecting and selling detailed records of private lives were once plainly described as ‘surveillance companies,’” wrote the former National Security Agency contractor. “Their rebranding as ‘social media’ is the most successful deception since the Department of War became the Department of Defense.”

Snowden’s sobering observation, which was retweeted more than 30,000 times, comes amid public outcry over revelations that Cambridge Analytica, a private data won’t stand in their way.

Regimented obedience

Do you think that our cops or military or our judicial system will help us save our freedom or shield us from tyranny? If so, you’d better think again. The Jews and their friends have spent the past 50 years politicizing our cops and our soldiers. They’ll do whatever they’re told to do by the politicians, without a second thought, no matter how atrocious. And, as for our judicial system, just remember that a judge is a cross between a lawyer and a politician.

Versus ready resistance

So, finally, I do believe that it behooves every real patriot to begin thinking now about what he will do in the event of a Chinese invasion. Begin thinking, begin making plans, begin getting ready, because it’s coming – but there won’t be any Chinese involved.

Thanks for being with me again today.

discussed and planned with a “sensitive natural habitat” and the interests of tourism and shipping industries were taken into consideration. The project has also received praise from the major Austrian oil and gas company OMV, which stressed it meant the “security of gas supply” for Europe.

The Nord Stream 2, however, has been repeatedly opposed by some European countries including Ukraine, Poland, Romania and the Baltic States.

Earlier, Konrad Szymanski, Poland’s secretary of state for European affairs, said he would urge Berlin to reject the project amid an ongoing scandal over the nerve agent attack on former double-agent Sergei Skripal in the U. K. Last month, German Foreign Minister Heiko Maas said that Germany didn’t link Nord Stream 2 to the Skripal incident, as the project was a commercial and economic enterprise.

EDITOR’S NOTE

The real issue here is whom should the Germans heed, their occupiers in the District of Corruption still trying to mind everybody’s business except America’s own, or the former enemy now acting as a true business partner and friend? Disregard Washington’s self-serving “advice,” Germany; look out for your best interests.

Damage control

“In light of new reports that the data was not destroyed, we are suspending these three parties from Facebook, pending further information,” the company said. “We will take whatever steps are required to see that the data in question is deleted once and for all – and take action against all offending parties.”

Commenting on a New York Times report regarding the unprecedented data breach, Snowden said it was Facebook, not Cambridge Analytica, that should be held responsible.

“Facebook makes their money by exploiting and selling intimate details about the private lives of millions, far beyond the scant details you voluntarily post. They are not victims. They are accomplices,” he wrote on Twitter.

Swedish-Hungarian woman flees to Hungary for security

hungarianambiance.com

Swedish-Hungarian Natalie Contessa of Sandeberg has moved from Stockholm to Hungary because of security reasons. She told channel M1 TV that, currently, Hungary is one of the safest countries in Europe due to lack of migrants.

The interview was broadcast by M1 TV on Friday, March 9. Natalie Contessa af Sandeberg whose mother is Hungarian told the interviewer: Hungary is unlike Sweden, Germany or Austria, which are flooded with migrants; the Swedish media are deliberately slanting the news on the refugee crisis including what really has been happening in Stockholm, where Natalie lived.

Public security in the Swedish capital has drastically deteriorated in the last two or three years.

She recalled that one morning on her way to work she was attacked by a migrant in the subway. In vain, she cried out for help but nobody helped because everybody was afraid, and the police did not come either. Finally, she managed to run away from the attacker.

Natalie Contessa of Sandeberg added that many policemen are also quitting their jobs because they are not protected either.

Many Swedes have a hard time getting a job at the university hospital where she worked where about eighty percent of her colleagues were immigrants, including doctors and nurses.

She also said school teachers regularly are threatened by migrant students with knives, and children get robbed on the street in broad daylight. This is yet another reason why many families are planning to leave.

O, no! No.

Natalie Contessa of Sandeberg said she was not a racist; she merely recounts her experiences, as Sweden is flooded by migrants who intimidate and threaten local citizens while most companies are in favor of hiring migrants.

She added that the Swedish government provides generous benefits to immigrants, but they do not appreciate it. Instead, they threaten indigenous Swedes who are now leaving the country in increasing numbers. Most of her friends have already left there, said the Swedish- Hungarian woman.

Ex-Pentagon official recalls WMD fiasco

By F. Michael Maloof
rt.com

Recent actions by the United States in the Middle East suggest it hasn’t learned anything from its monumental debacle fifteen years ago by invading Iraq, under a preemptive policy of regime change.

The strategy, led by the neocons in the Pentagon, was to throw out then-Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, replace him with a government favorable to the U. S. and then proceed to regime change in Syria, Iran and Libya, due to their close ties with Hussein.

Given the pro-Israeli neocons running the Pentagon at the time, such as then-Deputy Secretary Paul Wolfowitz and his undersecretary of defense Doug Feith, their strategy had the effect of having the Pentagon become an instrument of carrying out the foreign policy of Israel, which regarded these Middle East countries as a threat to its survival.

Even prior to becoming the deputy secretary of defense, Wolfowitz had designs of taking out Hussein.

He sought to develop a basis for invasion, based initially on Iraq’s support for terrorism and later possession of weapons of mass destruction, or WMD.

There was a time constraint – the United Nations was about to lift years of sanctions that had been imposed on Iraq following Desert Shield/Desert Storm, actions the U. S. and its allies took to kick Iraq out of Kuwait.

Credentials

In the spirit of transparency, I was director of Technology Security Operations in the Office of the Secretary of Defense during this period. Despite having WMD inspectors in and out of Iraq for a decade, however, my office at the time, which monitored technology to Iraqi research and development facilities over the years, had determined that there was no evidence of operational WMD left in Iraq.

However, that did not stop the Central Intelligence Agency, then led by George Tenet, from publishing in October 2002 a National Intelligence Estimate that Iraq indeed had WMD. Then, in December 2002, Tenet briefed President George Bush, saying that the evidence was a “slam dunk.”

The CIA’s determination is interesting, open a back channel with Pentagon policymakers in the Office of the Secretary of Defense where I worked. At the time, I was reporting directly to Feith and to a special assistant to Wolfowitz.

Prior to the invasion, Hage had told U. S. and local media in Beirut, and U. S. officials as well, that there would be a devastating effect of a war which would have a serious adverse impact on the Iraqi people generally, but particularly on the various minorities that make up the population of Iraq.

He said that the U. S. could defeat Hussein in a month but that would not bring peace and stability to Iraq “for decades.”

He told me that a war “would transform Iraq into a bloody Greek theater,” referring to the violence and revenge that would ensue among the myriad of minorities in the country. He also said that Iraq, which didn’t have any terrorist groups at the time, “eventually would become a haven for jihadists.”

New slant

Hage then sent a message from Hussein. The deal would include six concessions in exchange for the U. S. not attacking Iraq. The Syrians were concerned that if such an invasion occurred, it would have a spill-over effect on their own country.

Of the six terms, two of them could have been tested immediately to determine Iraq’s seriousness. One was to turn over to U. S. authorities the Iraqi-American terrorist living in Baghdad, Abdul Rahman Yassin, who was involved in the first bombing of the World Trade Center in 1993. To this day, Yassin remains at large, with a $5 million reward offered for his capture.

Another term was even more intriguing. Saddam Hussein would allow 5,000 U. S.

troops to enter into Iraq to look for WMD. In effect, the U. S. could have walked into Iraq without firing a shot.

The Syrians even offered to stage U. S. troops to enter Iraq. In exchange, the Damascus government requested U. S. assistance in economic infrastructure development.

Hussein also offered the U. S. majority ownership of all Iraqi oil, and elections under United Nations auspices. At the same time, he would seek asylum in another country, most probably Saudi Arabia. Ironically, it was Wolfowitz who commented that the sale of Iraqi oil would pay for the U. S. invasion. That never happened.

Nevertheless, Pentagon policymakers turned down all of Hussein’s unconditional terms. Why?

The decision of regime change in Iraq had been made, no matter what. The military solution was inevitable, since an earlier attempt to train Iraqis to undertake the effort had fizzled.

Very far off the record

In seeking a back channel, the Syrians said there was information that would be shared with the United States that it would not admit to publicly. As an initial test of that channel, the Syrians were asked whether Iraqi WMD had been sent to Syria prior to U. S. action.

The response, from no less than one of Syrian President Bashar Assad’s top advisers, Mohammed Nassif, to the Lebanese-American intermediary and then relayed to me, was that publicly Syria would deny their existence in Syria. However, if the back channel were created, “There would be a lot we could talk about.”

However, the Bush administration never followed up on the offer. Instead, then-Secretary of State Colin Powell in May 2003 visited Syria and publicly confronted and warned Mr. Assad. Mr. Powell accused Syria of harboring Saddam Hussein’s escaped leadership and Iraq’s WMD.

Unfortunately, U. S. policymakers in the days leading up to U. S. action in Iraq and afterward left to the Central Intelligence Agency any initiatives to Syria. The CIA jealously coveted its own exclusive back channel to Syria. So the CIA made every effort to scuttle the Syrian opening of a back channel to U. S. policymakers in the

The CIA jealously coveted its own exclusive back channel to Syria. So the CIA made every effort to scuttle the Syrian opening of a back channel to U. S. policymakers in the Pentagon.

This became apparent when the CIA rejected a Syrian initiative months earlier of similar unconditional terms prior to U. S. action in Iraq. Once rejected, the CIA then subverted the eleventh-hour Syrian initiative to present the same terms to Pentagon policymakers through my office.

The CIA was so upset with this attempt that it even accused me in particular of attempting to run a “rogue” operation to bypass the agency. That wasn’t true, since the CIA was informed of all steps. Informing the CIA, however, helped CIA elements more interested in damaging the Bush administration to scuttle that attempt.

In effect, the CIA had set up the Bush administration for failure. Syrians interested in working closer with the U. S. saw for themselves the CIA’s scuttling efforts.

In turn, Syria decided to close its own channel with the CIA. In October 2003, Tenet went to Syria to try to patch up the CIA-Syrian channel. He did not succeed.

The ensuing eight years of war in Iraq has cost trillions of dollars, the loss of life of some 4,500 U. S. troops and the tens of thousands of service personnel seriously maimed for life, and the deaths of hundreds of thousands of Iraqis. The U. S. has nothing to show for it, while its influence in the entire region has plummeted to next to nothing.

Yet, the U. S. was instrumental in the overthrow of Muammar Gaddafi, has aided jihadi Salafists in attempting to overthrow the Syrian government of Bashar Assad and is about ready to embark on other regime change initiatives in the Middle East and elsewhere. Will the U. S. ever learn?

Michael Maloof is a former Pentagon official and security analyst.

EDITOR’S NOTE

“...the Syrians were asked whether Iraqi WMD had been sent to Syria prior to U. S. action.” Here again is a “14th paragraph” switch suggesting there were WMDs. Indeed, but all of them are in occupied Palestine. How far do we trust fugitive whistleblower Edward Snowden? All the way. And this securely-retired former Pentagon official? Now, there is something that anyone who reads between the lines might ponder.

Cuba legislative elections to replace Raul

presstv.com

Cuba has held historic legislative elections to choose lawmakers that will in turn elect President Raul Castro’s successor, who will be the country’s first leader from outside of the Castro family since the Cuban Revolution in the 1960s.

No big shakeup

Some eight million eligible voters voted to choose 605 deputies of the National Assembly and 1,265 delegates to regional assemblies.

“Most of our deputies and delegates are young and are going to be the country’s leaders. It can help sustain the revolution,” said one voter, Julio Omar Prieto Garcia.

“The deputies and delegates are all prepared and possess higher degrees, so they know how to do their jobs. They have our approval,” said another, Gretchell Gonzalez.

President Castro, 86, was the first person to cast his vote on Sunday at a polling station in Segunda Frente, a town in the eastern province of Santiago de Cuba.

A gringo loose in Cuba

Some notes on the world’s most useless embargo, this from a while back, but perhaps of interest:

By Fred Reed

The American Conservative
December 2007

On Havana’s malecón, the seawall that parallels the shore, the waves roll in and hit the sudden obstacle, sending towering explosions of bright white spray far into the air, occasionally soaking the unwary pedestrian. Across the highway that follows the malecón is a cheap open-air restaurant, the DiMar. A steady breeze from the sea pours across the tables. A tolerable shrimp cocktail, topped with mayonnaise, costs a few bucks. On a couple of evenings I drank a beer there, watching Cuba go by. It wasn’t what I had expected.

Unlike many gringo tourists, I was legal, having gotten a license from the Treasury Department. Without a license travel to Cuba is illegal under the Trading with the Enemy Act of 1917. Why Cuba was my enemy wasn’t clear to me. Nor was it to the Cubans.

I had inadvertently neglected to tell the authorities that I was a journalist – I hate it when that happens – so I was not in a position to ask probing questions of officials. But then I didn’t want official twaddle. I wanted to wander, take cabs down the coast, just look at things. And did.

I was pleased to find the old part of Havana both charming and reasonably well preserved, especially around the convent of San Francisco. The latter is of course a museum now, as God knows we mustn’t be religions, but it is in good shape and breathes a moody solemnity. I tried to imagine the stillness in times before the motorcycle. The narrow lanes around it were closed to cars, making it pleasant to walk among the shops.

A trip back in time

The country is poor and run down, and itself almost a museum. Sitting in the DiMar is like visiting the Fifties. The American embargo makes it hard to get new cars, so many Cubans still drive cars from 1959, the year of the revolution, and before. Some sport jazzy paint jobs, and others don’t. It was remarkable to watch the rides of my adolescence go by, charting them mentally as one did in 1964 – ’54 Merc, ’57 Caddy, ’56 Chevy, on and on. Around me the other customers, down-scale Cubans in all shades of nonWhite, laughed and chatted.

They are an accommodating people. On my arrival they spoke a truncated Spanish hard to understand – “*Cómo etáh uteh? Ma o meno.*h.” – but they made an intense national effort to improve their clarity and by my fourth day they were comprehensible.

No Police State

Cuba doesn’t fit its sordid image. It is most assuredly a dictatorship, yet the police presence is much less than that of Washington, and such cops as I saw had no interest in me. It is not regimented. Havana does not feel – well, oppressed – as Moscow did during the days of the Soviet Union. Mao’s China it isn’t.

The island certainly isn’t dangerous to anyone. Somebody said that the only Communists remaining in the world were in Cuba, North Korea and the Harvard faculty lounge. I do not know whether Harvard’s professoriate thirsts for godless world hegemony, though the idea is not implausible, but it is absurd to put North Korea and Cuba in a category. Pyong Yang has, or wants, nuclear arms, and has both a huge army aimed at South Korea and a habit of testing ballistic missiles of long range. Cuba has little military and no one to use it against; from an American point of view, the Cuban armed forces are about as terrifying as George Will with a water pistol. It has no nuclear arms and no signs of wanting any. It is not a rogue State. It is a bedraggled island of pleasant people who need more money.

Cuba is expensive. Figuring the prices of things is difficult – deliberately so, one might suspect – because of a peculiar game that the government plays with currencies. Cuba has two, the national currency, which a visitor almost never sees, and the CUC (pronounced “kook”) which appears to exist to impoverish tourists. A visitor has to convert his money to CUCs. If you change dollars, the government skims twenty percent off the top, and then changes the rest at $1.08 per CUC. If you change Mexican pesos, which I did, the rate is 13.3 pesos per CUC when the dollar was trading at about 11 pesos. Visitors have to buy things for CUCs, which the seller then has to exchange for national currency at a rate of.... You see. Nobody seems sure what anything really costs. Still, it’s a rip.

The island could use some investment. While I found neighborhoods with nice-looking modern houses, said by taxi drivers to belong to governmental officials and employees of foreign firms, the rest of the city needs paint, repairs and new sidewalks. Countless once-elegant houses with pillared ending nearly 60 years of leadership by the two Castro brothers Fidel and Raul, which began with the 1960s Cuban Revolution.

“The next president may not have that surname, but he will undoubtedly be a son of the Revolution,” the Cuban Foreign Ministry said on Twitter.

Castro’s possible successor is predicted to be First Vice President Miguel Diaz-Canel.

Diaz-Canel, who cast his vote in the central city of Santa Clara, said the elections were a way for Cubans to defend their political system and way of life.

“We are going to elect a government that serves the people,” Diaz-Canel said after voting. “The triumphal march of the revolution will continue. Peace, liberty, independence and the sovereignty of the people will endure.”

Castro himself is running for a seat at the National Assembly as a deputy representing his jurisdiction.

The legendary leader of the Cuban revolution, Fidel Castro, died in November 2016, ten years after having ceded power to his brother, Raul.

porches and tall windows are now discolored and crumbling.

Why Communists imagine themselves to be revolutionary is a mystery. Whenever they gain power in a country, it comes to a dead stop and sits there as other countries pass it by. I do not think that Communism generates poverty; rather it finds it and preserves it. It has certainly done so here. Cuba seems firmly mired in 1959. How much of this comes from the embargo – “el bloqueo” as the Cubans call it – and how much from Communism, I don’t know. Nobody does. This is convenient for Castro, as he can blame everything on the United States. And does.

Curiously, Fidel’s irreplaceable supporter is Washington. Alongside highways, along Havana’s malecón, in little Mediterranean-looking villages down the coast one sees signs of the type, “Forty-three hours of the blockade would pay for a new school house.” Or for so many locomotives, or complete the national highway, or this or that. How the figures are arrived at, I don’t know, but it doesn’t matter. To an extent the signs are not propaganda but simply call attention to a fact: The embargo does hurt people who want jobs, dollars from tourists and consumer goods. They are perfectly aware why they don’t have them: the American embargo. This may or may not always be quite true, but it has a convincing verisimilitude. It makes Fidel look good. He is standing up to the bastards who are strangling us.

Isolated and troubled

How resolutely Communist are the Cuban people? This is just an impression, but I would say, “Not at all, if that much.” Abstractions ending in “-ism” are hobbies for people who have time for them. Everyone I talked to wanted more money – a better job, better food, better clothes, a chance to take the wife out to dinner. After these, more freedom.

As an example of Castro’s use of the embargo to maintain himself in power, consider the internet. People I talked to had heard of it of course, but had little idea what it was and no access to it. It can be found in hotels and apparently in tourist areas, though I didn’t see a single cybercafe of the sort that are found every twenty feet in all third-world countries I know. Why no internet? Cubans universally said that the U. S. embargo prevented Cuba from having access. This struck me as improbable. It was.

The Cuban government is lying, who would have thought it, but can blame lack of access on the embargo. Washington in effect thus aids Castro in maintaining his censorship.

Charley Reese vs. the sitting mob

Most feuds last till both sides tire of them. But, with the Prohibition era mafia’s rebirth occupying 545 war room seats in the District of Corruption, today’s wars on drugs and terrorism continue unabated.

By John Peeples
firstfreedom.net

Greetings and good health to my fellow kinsmen – freedom fighters at TFF – from these confines of Fed Gulag Devens where I continue to be held a POW by the Fed Army Govt 9,958 days (27 years 4 months) in its so-called “War on Drugs,” a phony war foisted upon the American people in 1969 and 1971 (two phases) by Pretender In Chief Richard M. Nixon of Watergate fame and ramped up in the 1980s during the Reagan-Bush administrations whereby Iran-Contra became the legacy of Ronald Reagan and George H. W. “Poppy” Bush.

Why continue playing the voting game? Remembering the late Charley Reese, a journalist for 49 years, most of his career – some 30 years – was spent with Florida’s Orlando Sentinel. Published in 1984, his “545 vs. 300,000,000” turned out to be that journalist’s most famous column.

Charley Reese, who passed away in May of 2013, was a friend of liberty, despising Big Government and the politicians who supported it regardless of party affiliation. Writing fearlessly, he had no sacred cows. Charley wasn’t politically correct, caring not whose toes he stepped on nor giving a rodent’s rear about whether people – even important people – liked or didn’t like what he wrote. He spoke his mind at all times. Politicians and the media did not care much for Charley, while the grassroots working class folks loved him.

Charley penned hundreds and hundreds of articles over the years, including in 1984 his timeless “545” column, for nothing has changed since he correctly and succinctly therein identified most if not all political problems in this country as being caused by 545 officeholders who control the Fed Army Govt in Cesspool, DC, the District of Corruption – 435 House members, 100 Senators, nine Supreme Court justices and a President.

The column is a classic. It should be on the front page of every newspaper today. And, no, this was not his last contribution to the Sentinel. His final appearance there was on 29 July 2001, and he continued to be a regular columnist for King Features until 2008, when health issues caused his retirement.

Charley’s last published sentence says: “Provided the voters have the gumption to manage their own employees... we should vote all of them out of office and clean up this mess!”

Sorry, Charley, voting doesn’t work, as history has proven. Those 545 people are neither employed by We the People nor our Sovereign States separately or united. They answer to the American Israeli Political Action Committee (AIPAC), multinational corporations, international banksters and the military industrial complex.

There is nothing “honorable” about the “545” or the Powers That Be they work for. Their sole interests are power, control and wealth. The Honorable has long since lost any basis in reality. Please remember that when you write your Congresscritter, “The Honorable...” I have more respect for a prostitute than those “545” in Cesspool, DC. At least they are honest about their trade.

Yes, the “545” are to blame, but who put them in office? Voter, you are as guilty as they. You keep electing them over and over. That’s insanity!

Once you have read the Charley Reese article that follows, it’s your decision. It is up to you.

“Tax reform”: what a joke! Who is to blame for all these taxes? Before their rise to revolution, how much did our Founders endure of such burdens under that foreign king?

545 vs. 300,000,000 people

By Charley Reese
orlandosentinel.com

Politicians are the only people in the world who create problems and then campaign against them.

Have you ever wondered why, if both the Democrats and the Republicans are against deficits, we have deficits? Have you ever wondered why, if all the politicians are against inflation and high taxes, we have inflation and high taxes?

You and I don’t propose a federal budget. The president does.

You and I don’t have the constitutional authority to vote on appropriations. The House of Representatives does.

You and I don’t write the tax code. Congress does.

You and I don’t set fiscal policy. Congress does.

You and I don’t control monetary policy. The Federal Reserve Bank does.

One hundred senators, 435 congressmen, one president and nine Supreme Court justices equates to 545 human beings out of 300 million who are directly, legally, morally and individually responsible for the domestic problems that plague this country.

I excluded the members of the Federal Reserve Bank because that problem was created by the Congress. In 1913, Congress delegated its constitutional duty to provide a sound currency to a federally chartered but private central bank.

I excluded all the special interests and lobbyists for a sound reason. They have no legal authority. They have no ability to coerce a senator, a congressman or a president to do one cotton-picking thing. I don’t care if they offer a politician $1 million dollars in cash. The politician has the power to accept or reject it. No matter what the lobbyist promises, it is the legislator’s responsibility to determine how he votes.

Those 545 human beings spend much of their energy convincing you that what they did is not their fault. They cooperate in this common con regardless of party.

What separates a politician from a normal human being is an excessive amount of gall. No normal human being would have the gall of a Speaker, who stood up and criticized the President for creating deficits. (The president can only propose a budget. He cannot force the Congress to accept it.)

The Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land, gives sole responsibility to the House of Representatives for originating appropriations and taxes. Who is the speaker of the House? (John Boehner: He is the leader of the majority party. He and fellow House members, not the President, can approve any budget they want.) If the President vetoes it, they can pass it over his veto if they agree to. [The House had then passed a budget but the Senate had failed to approve a budget in over three years. The President’s proposed budgets had gotten almost unanimous rejections in the Senate at that time.]

Just 545 Americans have fouled up this great Nation

It seems inconceivable to me that a Nation of 300 million cannot replace 545 people who stand convicted – by present facts – of incompetence and irresponsibility. I can’t think of a single domestic problem, from an unfair tax code to defense overruns, that is not traceable directly to those people. When you fully grasp the plain truth that 545 people exercise complete power over the federal government, then it must follow that what exists is what they want to exist.

If the tax code is unfair, it’s because they want it unfair.

If the budget is in the red, it’s because they want it in the red. If the Army and Marines are in Iraq and Afghanistan, it’s because they want them in Iraq and Afghanistan.

If they do not receive social security but are on an elite retirement plan unavailable to the people, it’s because they want it that way.

There are no insoluble government problems.

Do not let these 545 people shift the blame to bureaucrats, whom they hire and whose jobs they can abolish; to lobbyists, whose gifts and advice they can reject; to regulators, to whom they give the power to regulate and from whom they can remove this power.

Above all, do not let them con you into the belief that there exist disembodied mystical forces like “the economy,” “inflation” or “politics” that prevent them from doing what they take an oath to do.

Those 545 people, and they alone, are responsible. They, and they alone, have the

“Do you have any ideas on how we can get Hansen?” Quote by an IRS top agent about a man some younger readers may not remember – U. S. Representative George Vernon Hansen, the Republican who represented his State of Idaho for 14 years, 1965 to 1969 and 1975 to 1985. In 1980, Representative Hansen authored the book To Harass Our People, The IRS and Government Abuse of Power, with an updated version in 1984.

“To Harass Our People... is an incredible story of brute force, harassment, lies and cover-up – a true tale which is so extraordinary that it approaches the implausible. I must admit that I remained skeptical of the evidence at first. Like most Americans, I respect our system of government and searched for any reasonable explanation for the misconduct of this agency. But looking harder and digging deeper into the activities of the IRS only convinced me that my worst suspicions were more than justified.”

– Congressman George Hansen

One may think the information in this book is dated. No, it contains an eagle-eyed view of how the IRS grew into a police apparatus which can be used to frighten the citizenry whether rich or poor, important or average, victims of natural or federal disasters, ministers, parents who prefer religious schools or owners of borderline businesses. Intimidation, threats, lies, embarrassment, seizures of salaries, cars, machinery, boats, homes, enforcement of liens, padlocking of doors, trials and even imprisonment are methods identified in this book in order to obtain assessments which revenue officers believe are due to sate Caesar.

During the 1980s, Representative Hansen witnessed the evolution of today’s political correctness. “A State religion has not been in our minds for two hundred years. It is, in fact, almost impossible to frame the question in thinkable terms in our century. Nonetheless, difficult to believe or not, we are faced with the emergence of a government religion to which all men must subscribe at the pain of exclusion from the public platform, public employment and perhaps even from public office.

“The ingredients are: 1) a government bureaucracy where many key positions are filled with functional pagans; 2) the power of the government and of the dollar to demand compliance; and 3) an entirely new set of social priorities either initiated by or nurtured by the very same bureaucrats who have been working so assiduously to repress religion. Taken together, they make a potent mix.”

District of Corruption

One of many covert activities of the IRS included the compiling of lists of supposedly non-compliant individuals to intimidate or repeatedly audit. As the author reports, the IRS is interested in tax protestor groups, and in right-wing organizations like the John Birch Society. They attend such meetings and record names and license numbers which are placed upon watch lists. I have personally witnessed such activities at various protests; but now the militarized police do much of the dirty work for the IRS revenue men.

FOIA scofflaws

The IRS even had systems in place to avoid complying with requests made under the Freedom of Information Act. Here is a copy of one paragraph from a 1976 IRS memorandum:

“Attached is a list identifying tax resisters in Idaho. This list is provided to you for tax administration purposes. This list has a control number and should not be duplicated. It should also be maintained under lock security. The list will be periodically changed with names either added or deleted as the situation requires. Upon the receipt of a new list, forward the old list to the intelligence Division for destruction.” Hummmm...

Special targets

I personally believe that the U. S. government operatives are much more concerned about tax protestors than any other kind of dissidents. This can be attested to by their past ham-handed treatment of former tax protestors. Some were murdered, some imprisoned.

You are being watched, says the author ... well, today they have much more elaborate methods of keeping tabs on our activities – with cameras, computers and new tracking devices.

To Harass Our People begins with a chapter covering a 1976 plan for an armed IRS door to door raid on specific individuals considered non-compliant; although some were misidentified persons and others were legally not required to file taxes. This was going to be the IRS method of teaching the locals about tax laws and voluntary compliance! Actually, it was to create fear in a very small town in Idaho where violence could have been the result. Little St. Anthony, Idaho, was their targeted town, but the siege was called off before the IRS thugs were able to strap on their pistols.

Still available

My softbound paperback copy of To Harass Our People was published in 1984 and contains 222 pages and copies of original IRS documents. This book is for sale on the internet.

Representative Hansen’s investigation into the nefarious tactics of voluntary compliance by the IRS did not go unnoticed by the dirty dudes at the IRS; therefore, they made sure this investigator of their agency paid a heavy price. Do you really think it was just a coincidence that U. S. Congressman George Hansen was sentenced to jail time due to irregular tax issues?

Decision time

Even U. S. Congressmen can lose their freedom, “while the IRS is engaged in a war against America’s citizens.” What recourse do U. S. taxpayers have other than to pay the militant piper? Americans need to understand that their hard-earned incomes are being frittered away by a money-hungry glutton, the U. S. government and its out-of-control agencies.

Fedguy considers intruders citizens, citizens intruders

Revolution’s in the air! Why? The NY-DC Axis is rewarding its takers with a $2 billion bonus for hiring aliens ahead of Whites.

newobserveronline.com

The U. S. government’s latest “Optional Practical Training” (OPT) program pays American companies to employ foreign graduates ahead of Americans, and in the 2017 financial year “swiped” $2 billion from trust funds for the elderly to favor 240,000 alien college graduates over an equal number of U. S.-resident graduates,” a new report has revealed.

The study, produced by the Center for Immigration Studies, said that “employers of foreign students who have a degree from a U. S. institution are given an 8.25 percent tax break if they hire an alien, rather than a U. S. college grad with the same skills, and paid at the same salary.”

Citizens as milk cows

Laid out with FY 2017 data, this means that some 240,000 American workers are adversely impacted by this program (shouldered out of jobs by the subsidized aliens), the CIS report said, adding that the subsidies to hire the foreign alumni are extracted from Social Security, Medicare and Unemployment Insurance Program trust funds estimated to be in the area of $1.98 billion.

The program has had silent but bipartisan support; it was created by the Bush II administration without any congressional authorization, was subsequently expanded by the Obama administration, and has been tolerated by the Trump administration.

The employers benefiting from the subsidies directly, and universities benefiting indirectly, know all about the program, which is all but unknown to the older Americans subsidizing it, and is similarly unknown to the young U. S. college grads who are hurt by it.

“Given this twisted political dynamic, inertia and the total silence of the media on this point, the program persists and grows each year,” the CIS report continued.

The report went further to quote an “obscure” United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) document that shows the number of approvals of Employment Authorization Documents by category, “EADS by Classification and Basis for Eligibility, Oct. 1, 2012 – June 29, 2017.”

This document shows the numbers of OPT/EADs (usually good for one year) issued to F-1 college graduates, as well as the number of extensions for F-1 alums who had studied science, technology, engineering or math (STEM), and each of these, recently, has been good for two more years.

The figures

The CIS research added the most recent regular OPT and STEM/OPT estimations to the prior year’s STEM extension data to get a current estimate of the number of subsidized jobs held by OPT aliens (and thus denied to U. S. workers) at the end of FY 2017.

Data were available for only the first nine months of FY 2017 so, assuming a constant flow of these applications, the CIS researcher multiplied the available number by 1.333, which produced this:

- Estimated regular OPT for FY 2017: 153,646
- Estimated STEM extension for FY 2017: 44,073
- Reported STEM extensions for FY 2016 : 45,184
- Total: 242,903

This the CIS rounded down to 240,000 to account for some returns to the old country and some movements to other visas, primarily the H-1B, but probably some conditional green cards for those newly married to citizens or green card holders.

Then the CIS took the 240,000, and applied a guess of $50,000 a year for these

EDITOR’S NOTE

Many still hold to and hope Trump is on the level. But U. S. Presidents – like cotton candy – are all fluff and no substance. “Voting” simply buys the enemy more time to condition us into New Soviet Personhood. Remember another great anti-establishmentarian named Ronald Reagan, who, in spite of media munchkins kid gloving him constantly, made it all the way from President of the Communist Screen Actors Guild to California Governor, then captured the Oval Office? He was a swamp drainer too, yet federal judges along with the M. I. Complex plus his own staff reversed the pump flow and gave us bigger crocodiles at every turn. If you are not part of that problem, wise up! It’s high time for disobedience, homophobia, defiance, racism and action, yes, you, and now.

jobs (it is probably rather higher for the STEM people) and multiplied to get a rough idea of the total wages. It comes to about $12 billion.

Since employers and employees – routinely – each contribute 8.25 percent of salary to the trust funds, this indicates a loss to the funds of 16.5 percent of the whole, or a total annual loss of $1.98 billion.

“So the government is giving almost $2 billion in tax breaks to American employers if they hire alien – not resident – workers,” the CIS report concluded.

In war, Russia or China would take down U. S. satellites

By Dave Majumdar
nationalinterest.org

Russian and Chinese space capabilities are growing rapidly, but moreover, both powers are developing counter-space capabilities to blunt America’s advantage in that domain.

“Foreign countries – particularly China and Russia – will continue to expand their space-based reconnaissance, communications and navigation systems in terms of the numbers of satellites, the breadth of their capability and the applications for use,” director of national intelligence Dan Coats said in his written testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee on March 6. “Both Russia and China continue to pursue antisatellite (ASAT) weapons as a means to reduce U. S. and allied military effectiveness.”

Coats noted that both Russia and China continue to press for restrictions on space weapons, but said that during a time of war, both Beijing and Moscow would justify the offensive space operations as a military necessity.

Equalizers

“Russia and China aim to have non-destructive and destructive counter-space weapons available for use during a potential future conflict,” Coats said. “We assess that, if a future conflict were to occur involving Russia or China, either country would justify attacks against U. S. and allied satellites as necessary to offset any perceived U. S. military advantage derived from military, civil or commercial space systems. Military reforms in both countries in the past few years indicate an increased focus on establishing operational forces designed to integrate attacks against space systems and services with military operations in other domains.”

Additionally, both Beijing and the Kremlin are working on destructive counter-space weapons that will likely become operational in the coming years.

Frantic preparations

“Russian and Chinese destructive ASAT weapons probably will reach initial operational capability in the next few years. China’s PLA has formed military units and begun initial operational training with counterspace capabilities that it has been developing, such as ground-launched ASAT missiles. Russia probably has a similar class of system in development. Both countries are also advancing directed-energy weapons technologies for the purpose of fielding ASAT weapons that could blind or damage sensitive space-based optical sensors, such as those used for remote sensing or missile defense.”

Vulnerable in space

Perhaps the more dangerous threats are Russian and Chinese satellites that can get close and attack other satellites. “Russia and China continue to launch ‘experimental’ satellites that conduct sophisticated on-orbit activities, at least some of which are intended to advance counterspace capabilities,” Coats said. “Some technologies with peaceful applications – such as satellite inspection, refueling and repair – can also be used against adversary spacecraft.”

Coats noted that both adversary Nations are pressing for agreements on preventing the weaponization of space; however, the United States intelligence community is suspicious.

“Russia and China continue to publicly and diplomatically promote international agreements on the non-weaponization of space and ‘no first placement’ of weapons in space,” Coats said. “However, many classes of weapons would not be addressed by such proposals, allowing them to continue their pursuit of space warfare capabilities while publicly maintaining that space must be a peaceful domain.”

Libya: The true face of “humanitarian intervention”

By Daniel Kovalik
rt.com

Seven years ago, NATO began its “humanitarian bombing” of Libya. While “humanitarian bombing” is an oxymoron, many believe that a country is not truly advancing human rights if it’s not bombing another back to the Stone Age.

As an initial matter, it must be said that while the U. N. had authorized a NATO fly-zone over Libya to protect civilians – all civilians, by the way – there was never authorization for the full-scale invasion which was carried out and which quickly became aimed at regime change. Therefore, the NATO operation which actually took place was illegal.

Spreading democracy by the cartload

What’s more, the Libyan invasion did more to undermine human rights than it did to protect them. According to Amnesty International’s most recent report on Libya, there are now three rival governments vying for power in the country along with various militias, smugglers and other sundry armed groups. As Amnesty International explains, all participants in the armed conflict in Libya “carried out indiscriminate attacks in heavily populated areas leading to deaths of civilians and unlawful killings. Armed groups arrested and indefinitely detained thousands of people. Torture and other ill treatment was widespread in prisons under the control of armed groups, militias and state officials.” And, to top it all off, slaves are being sold in public markets in Libya – something not seen in the world for over a century.

This is the aftermath of an intervention which, we were told, was supposed to improve human rights in Libya. Indeed, the intervention was spearheaded by Hillary Clinton, Samantha Power and Susan Rice – three self-described warriors for human and women’s rights. Instead, they became three ushers of the Apocalypse. In addition, Italy and France, which also helped lead the charge for invasion, had their own reasons for intervening in Libya. For his part, French President Nicolas Sarkozy appeared to be singularly focused on killing Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi, who allegedly gave him €50 million for his presidential campaign – a claim which was just coming to light and to which Gaddafi was the chief witness.

While Gaddafi certainly was no saint, he was a much better leader for his country than many of those the West supports, such as the monarchy of Saudi Arabia, the death squad State of Colombia or the coup government in Honduras. Indeed, Muammar Gaddafi, at the urging of his son, Saif, was attempting to democratize Libya at the time of the invasion, and the pair were willingly accepting the help of the U. S.’s National Democratic Institute to do so!

Heroic leader

In addition, Gaddafi had taken Libya from being the least prosperous country in Africa to the most prosperous by the time of the NATO operation. As one commentator explains, before the intervention, “Libya had the highest GDP per capita and life expectancy on the continent. Fewer people lived below the poverty line than in the Netherlands.”

Moreover, one of the main reasons, we were told, that NATO needed to intervene in 2011 was to save Benghazi from imminent harm by the government forces of Gaddafi. However, Hillary Clinton’s own internal emails show that her team recognized that any humanitarian problems confronting Benghazi had passed by the time of the NATO bombing. For example, Clinton’s assistant, Huma Abedin, in an email dated February 21, 2011 – that is, just a mere four days after the initial anti-government protests broke out in Libya – explains that the Gaddafi forces no longer controlled Benghazi and that the mood in the city was indeed “celebratory” by that time. Then, on March 2, just over two weeks before the bombing began,

Harriet Spanos of USAID sent an email describing “[s]ecurity reports” which “confirm that Benghazi has been calm over the past couple of days.”

Indeed, as explained to me by Khaled Kaim, Gaddafi’s last foreign minister whom I recently met in Venezuela: he personally urged U. S. representatives at the U. N. Security Council to hold off the planned bombing raid for one hour so that U. N. observers on the ground could confirm his claim that Benghazi was not under threat. Of course his pleas were ignored. Kaim’s warnings that the impending invasion of Libya would only unleash more chaos and terror on the world were also disregarded.

Meanwhile, Benghazi is now the site of a grave humanitarian crisis and a hotbed for terrorists post-intervention. Again, Amnesty International writes that “[a] number of mass graves were uncovered in Benghazi between February and October [2017]. On at least four occasions, groups of bodies were found in different parts of the city with their hands bound behind their backs, and in some cases blindfolded with signs of torture and execution-style killing.”

In addition, during the early part of 2017, one armed faction laid siege to an apartment complex in the Ganfouda area of Benghazi, “cutting off all supplies to the area, including food and water, and had trapped civilians and wounded fighters [of another faction] without access to medical care and other basic services.” And, when the same faction broke the siege by launching an armed assault on this area, it engaged in “indiscriminate” killings, with fighters from the faction posing for photos with the dead bodies.

And yet, where are the self-proclaimed defenders of human rights for Libya and Benghazi now? Where are their cries for humanitarian intervention? Of course, all of those responsible for this absolute disaster have moved on and remain silent about the tragedy they have wrought in that country.

Greedy pattern

The intervention in Libya was not truly about human rights, just as other similar Western interventions in countries like Iraq, Afghanistan and Syria have not been about either human rights or even fighting terror. And, indeed, these interventions have only undermined human rights and further spread terror. In the case of Libya, the predictable havoc unleashed there has spread to neighboring States such as Niger, Tunisia, Mali, Chad and Cameroon. In addition, the refugee crisis created by the chaos unleashed by the NATO intervention in Libya is undermining the stability of all Europe.

One can only conclude from this that the West, and especially the United States, is hell-bent on spreading instability around the world, despite pretending to accomplish the very opposite. Indeed, the U. S. keeps bombing Libya periodically in an effort to at least contain the very forces of chaos it helped unleash there.

Gruesome fixation

In chaos, Western countries and their transnational corporations see opportunity for more domination and more profits. As with Little Finger in Game of Thrones, they see chaos not as a pit, but as a ladder. In the case of countries like Libya, the West goes in and bombs it to oblivion and then brings in companies which charge that country to rebuild it. And the West is not shy about this grisly strategy for money-making.

As the New York Times explained in an article just after the NATO operation ended with the brutal killing of Gaddafi – an article accompanied by a photo of an oil terminal in Misurata, Libya, on fire and with black smoke billowing out – “Western security, construction and infrastructure companies that see profit-making opportunities receding in Iraq and Afghanistan have turned their sights on Libya... Entrepreneurs are abuzz about the business potential of a country with huge needs and the oil to pay for them, plus the competitive advantage of Libyan gratitude toward the United States and its NATO partners.

“A week before Colonel Qaddafi’s death on Oct. 20, a delegation from 80 French companies arrived in Tripoli to meet officials of the Transitional National Council, the interim government. Last week, the new British defense minister, Philip Hammond, urged British companies to ‘pack their suitcases’ and head to Tripoli.”

But what is good for such corporations is not good for the rest of us. Simply put, the world cannot afford another war which wreaks havoc on entire regions of the globe, ushering in massive human misery and environmental destruction in its wake. As King Pyrrhus might have said, another “victory” like the one in Libya may be the undoing of us.

In hot water for plan to revoke terrorists’ passports

sputniknews.com
Norway’s Justice Minister Sylvi Listhaug, who is no stranger to controversy, has triggered a nationwide debate with a divisive Facebook post, in which she accuses her political rivals of valuing “the rights of terrorists” above national security. The debate veered in an “undesired direction” after talk of Anders Breivik resurfaced.

Liberals lament plain facts

In a post that became the most written-about story in the Nordic country, Sylvi Listhaug of the right-wing Progress Party, currently part of the “blue” government coalition, claimed that the opposition Labor Party cherished “the rights of terrorists” above national security. The post was accompanied by a graphic image of balaclava-clad militants.

Listhaug’s post was aimed at mocking the rivals, led by Jonas Gahr Støre, who promised to vote against the recent proposal to revoke the citizenship of Norwegians fighting for terrorist groups without having to wait for a conviction.

“We want to revoke the passports and citizenship of foreign fighters and terrorists quickly and effectively! Labor wants to vote against. In the fight against terror, we cannot sit and twiddle our thumbs,” Listhaug wrote.

However, Listhaug’s post appeared the very day “Utøya July 22,” a film about Anders Breivik’s massacre, was released in Norwegian cinemas, which many perceived as lack of fair play on Listhaug’s part. In 2011, Breivik killed 69 people at the Labor Youth Camp located on the island of Utøya in the worst act of violence in Norway’s post-WW2 history.

“We have been victims of terror, and we are fighting against terror. For Listhaug to make such a claim so offensive and unfair is disappointing and unbefitting of a Norwegian justice minister,” Labor leader Støre told national broadcaster NRK.

Semantic fury

Before the attacks, Breivik, who is often referred to by his initials ABB in Norway, was a member of the Progress Party from 1999 to 2006, but found Norway’s most anti-immigrant party not radical enough. As Listhaug’s post apparently hit a sore spot with the Labor Party, the Breivik connection quickly sprung up in the debate.

“We have been very careful not to link ABB and the Progress Party after July 22. However, Listhaug has now made it more difficult,” Oslo Mayor Raymond Johansen of the Labor Party tweeted.

Prime Minister Erna Solberg told NRK that rhetoric occasionally overshadows political content in politics, arguing that this is what has happened in this case. According to Solberg, the image and the tone used in Listhaug’s attack on Labor took the focus off the measures to fight terror.

Knut Erik Engh, a Progress Party representative in Ulstein, conceded that he would have used different rhetoric, while fundamentally agreeing with Listhaug about the message.

“What she means is we must make sure it is not easy for foreign fighters to travel and that there must be a consequence. She thinks Labor has been too weak in its position on this, and they really have,” Engh told NRK.

Listhaug later defended herself by claiming her idea was only to discuss the proposal of withdrawing “foreign fighters” citizenship in a fast and efficient way.

“It has never ever crossed my mind that it could be linked to the cruel massacre on Utøya that hit so many innocent people and Norwegian democracy... Nor was it my intention to hurt anyone, and I really hope to be believed,” Listhaug wrote, assuring the public of her “great compassion” for the Utøya survivors and those who lost their loved ones.

A devout Christian, Listhaug previously served as Norway’s Integration Minister, during which she saw to a toughening of Norway’s immigration laws. She is also in favor of the repatriation of migrants.

The Progress Party, as E. U.-skeptic and Atlanticist, is currently Norway’s third largest. It is led by Siv Jensen, Norway’s Finance Minister, since 2013.

Modern Newspeak

Here’s how internet censors are making sure you hear only one side of the story.

By Daisy Luther
activistpost.com

It’s not breaking news that the internet censors have been hard at work to silence voices that oppose the mainstream media agenda. But, after the influence that social media had on the last election, things are going to a whole new level. The internet, that last bastion of truly free speech, isn’t very free anymore.

We’re watching the evolution of Newspeak right before our very eyes as the internet strives to silence any voices that oppose their carefully crafted stories of how guns are bad, there are 291 genders and anyone who isn’t a liberal is an evil, Nazi racist.

If you aren’t familiar with the term “Newspeak,” it’s from George Orwell’s prophetic novel, 1984.

Don’t you see that the whole aim of Newspeak is to narrow the range of thought? In the end we shall make thought-crime literally impossible, because there will be no words in which to express it. Every concept that can ever be needed will be expressed by exactly one word, with its meaning rigidly defined and all its subsidiary meanings rubbed out and forgotten... The process will still be continuing long after you and I are dead. Every year fewer and fewer words, and the range of consciousness always a little smaller. Even now, of course, there’s no reason or excuse for committing thought-crime. It’s merely a question of self-discipline, reality-control. But in the end there won’t be any need even for that... Has it ever occurred to you, Winston, that by the year 2050, at the very latest, not a single human being will be alive who could understand such a conversation as we are having now?

Media munchkins

YouTube, Twitter and Facebook have all been participating in a full-on purge of not just conservative voices, but the voices of anyone who is loudly anti-establishment. Any internet personality who is pro-gun or anti-socialism can fully expect to be censored. If you go against the agenda, you will be silenced.

Apparently, we have become too discerning for their liking and we can’t be trusted to hear both sides of the story and decide what seems most accurate.

Let me preface this: It isn’t about being a fan of websites like Infowars or Natural News. It’s about being a fan of free speech. It’s about getting the truth instead of a carefully scripted narrative.

In a video, Ben Swann, who is mercifully back from a long, unexplained hiatus, gives us the facts on how the internet censors are striving to ensure we hear only one side of the story.

I’m certainly not in the same category as Mike Adams or Alex Jones, who have hundreds of thousands of followers, but even I have experienced this censorship. Facebook frequently refuses to let me pay to boost posts that might be controversial in nature. Back in 2016, I posted an article containing two videos, one of which was quickly removed from YouTube. It was about the threat of civil unrest out in the Milwaukee suburbs after a cop killed a Black man. The media portrayed the man’s sister as warmly trying to prevent the unrest, urging people not to burn down their own neighborhoods. But they cut her rant right before she urged people to burn down the suburbs instead. I quoted her as saying:

Burnin’ down shit ain’t going to help nothin’! Y’all burnin’ down shit we need in our community. Take that shit to the suburbs. Burn that shit down! We need our shit! We need our weaves. I don’t wear it. But we need it. We need our food. We need our gas. Y’all wanna hurt somebody you take that shit further out!

But somehow, I was the one who was in the doghouse for quoting what she said and showing both of the videos. My article was reported as “hate speech” a number of times and Facebook removed it. Not only did they remove it, they banned me from posting for a week, giving me a “warning” about hate speech. I also got put in Facebook jail once when someone asked what Godwin’s Law was and I used the word Nazi because it hurt someone’s feelings who was from Germany when I said the word “Hitler.” I could not make this stuff up.

Inside the corral

A lot of you may be wondering why alternative media sources use social media at all, and the answer is – we have to if we want to be heard. If we want to be competitive and we want our stories to be out there, we must go where the people are. And there are millions of people on Facebook, Twitter and YouTube.

Purges like this are why it’s particularly important that you sign up for email lists if you want to hear the real stories. And even then, it isn’t a guarantee you won’t be the victim of censors. During the election, for research purposes, I signed up for both Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump’s email lists. Clinton’s ended up in my inbox without fail, while Trump’s went to my spam folder, no matter how often I marked it as “not spam.”

This is something we have to stop now. We have to speak up and let these social media outlets know that we aren’t going to put up with their censorship and their control of the national narrative.

We’re watching 1984 unfold right before our very eyes.

Trump cuts off U. S. humanitarian aid to Palestine

pressTV.com
President Donald Trump has signed into law legislation that halts some aid to the Palestinian Authority until it stops paying Palestinian prisoners in Israeli jails and the families of those killed by Israeli forces. He cut the Palestinian aid while approving the massive $1.3 trillion omnibus spending bill on March 23.

The law excepts U. S. aid to Palestinian water, childhood vaccination programs and East Jerusalem al-Quds hospitals.

The Palestinian Authority denounced the law, will continue payments to families of Palestinian “martyrs and prisoners.”

Yusef al-Mahmoud, spokesperson for the Ramallah-based P. A. government, said the “martyrs and prisoners are, in the eyes of our people, sacred symbols of freedom and struggle and opposition to humiliation and surrender.”

He said Washington should instead have called for “ending the occupation and suffering of the Palestinian people.”

Congress, the spokesman added, should also make aid to Israel conditional on “ending its occupation and settlements, as the occupation is responsible for killing our people and throwing them into prison.”

Sami Abu Zuhri, as the spokesman for Palestinian resistance movement Hamas, also condemned the law.

Relations between the U. S. and Palestine have been strained since December 2017 when Trump recognized Jerusalem al-Quds as Israel’s capital and vowed to relocate the U. S. embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to the occupied city.

Jerusalem al-Quds remains at the core of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, with Palestinians hoping that the eastern part of the city would eventually be the capital of a future independent Palestinian State.

In January, the U. S. administration decided to cut its financial contribution to the United Nations’ Relief and Welfare Agency (UNRWA) that renders aid to Palestinian refugees.

The U. S. State Department announced Washington would hold back 65 million dollars to UNRWA – more than half its planned contribution this year – until the agency makes unspecified reforms.

UNRWA was established by the U. N. General Assembly in 1946, one year after the creation of the Israeli regime.

More than half of the two million people in the Gaza Strip depend on support from UNRWA among other humanitarian organizations.

Chapter VII

October 23, 1991. This morning is my first chance to write since Katherine and I picked up the munitions in Maryland last week. Our unit has carried out three missions in the last six days.

Altogether, the Organization is held responsible for more than 200 separate incidents in different parts of the country, according to news reports. We are really into the thick of a guerrilla war now.

Last Monday night, Henry, George and I raided the Washington Post. It was a quick thing, requiring little preparation, although we did argue for a few minutes ahead of time about the way it should be done.

Henry was for going after personnel, but we ended up wrecking one of their presses instead. Henry’s idea was that the three of us should force our way into the newsroom and editorial offices on the sixth floor of the Washington Post building and kill as many people as we could with fragmentation grenades and machine guns. If we struck just before their 7:30 PM deadline, we would catch nearly everyone in.

George overruled that maneuver as being too risky to be carried out without detailed planning. Hundreds of people work in the Washington Post building, and the sounds of grenades and shooting on the sixth floor would probably bring a lot of them swarming into the stairwells and lobby. If we tried to come down on the elevators, someone could pull the main switch on us, and we’d be trapped.

On the other hand, the Post’s pressroom is visible through a big plate-glass window from the lobby. So I rigged up a makeshift bomb by taping a hand grenade to a small anti-tank mine. The whole thing weighed about six pounds and was quite awkward, but it could be thrown about 50 feet like an oversized grenade.

We parked in an alley about 100 yards from the main entrance of the Post. As soon as George had disarmed the guard, Henry blasted a huge hole in the pressroom window with his sawed-off shotgun. Then I pulled the pin on the grenade-mine contraption I had rigged and heaved it into the rollers of the nearest press, which was just being plated up for the night’s run.

We ducked behind the masonry parapet while the bomb exploded, and then Henry and I hurriedly threw half-a-dozen thermite grenades into the pressroom. We were all back in the all before anyone had even come out onto the sidewalk, and so no one saw our car. Katherine, of course, had done her usual magic with our faces.

The next morning the Post appeared on the streets about an hour later than usual, and home subscribers missed their papers altogether, since the early editions had been skipped, but the Post was otherwise apparently none the worse for wear. We had substantially damaged only one press with our bomb and smoked things up a bit with our incendiary grenades, one of which set a barrel of ink afire, but the Post had lost virtually none of its capacity for spreading its lies and venom as a result of our efforts.

We were quite chagrined by this outcome. It became clear to us that we had foolishly taken a risk far out of proportion to any advantage which could have been reasonably expected.

We have resolved that, in the future, we will undertake no mission on our own initiative until we have carefully evaluated its objective and convinced ourselves that it is worth the risk. We cannot afford to strike the System simply for the sake of striking, or we will become like an army of gnats trying to bite an elephant to death. Each blow must be carefully calculated for its effect.

Henry’s idea of attacking the Post’s newsroom and editorial offices seems much better in retrospect. We should have held off for a few days in order to work out a sound plan which would have really crippled the Post, instead of rushing into our halfassed raid on its presses. All we really succeeded in doing was putting the Post on guard and making any future raids much more hazardous.

We did redeem ourselves a bit the morning after the raid, however. Surmising that the editorial staff had spent most of the night in their offices writing new copy about the events of the evening and would, therefore, be at home sleeping late, we decided to pay one of them a visit.

After looking over the newspaper, we settled on the editorial page editor, who had written a particularly vicious editorial against us. His words dripped with Talmudic hatred. Racists like us, he said, deserve no consideration from the police or any decent citizen. We should be shot down on sight like mad dogs. Quite a contrast with his usual solicitude for Black rapists and murderers and his tirades against “police brutality” and “overreaction”!

Since his editorial was an incitement to murder, it seemed to us only appropriate that he be given a taste of his own remedy.

Henry and I rode a bus downtown and then waved down a taxi with a Black driver. By the time we pulled up in the editor’s driveway in Silver Spring, the Black was in the trunk – dead.

I waited in the taxi while Henry rang the bell and told the woman who answered that he was delivering a package from the Post and needed a signed receipt. When the sleepy-eyed editor appeared at the door in his bathrobe a few moments later, Henry literally blew him in half with two blasts from the sawed-off shotgun he had been carrying under his jacket.

On Wednesday all four of us (Katherine drove the car) completely destroyed the Washington area’s most powerful TV transmitter.

That one was hairy, and there were moments when I didn’t think we were going to get away.

It is still not clear what effect all our activity is having on the general public. For the most part they are just going about their affairs as they always have.

There have been effects, though. The National Guards of a dozen States have been called up to reinforce local police forces, and there are now large, around-the-clock guard details stationed outside every government building in Washington, the major media offices in a number of cities and the homes of hundreds of government officials.

Within a week, I suspect, every Congressman, every Federal judge, and every Federal bureaucrat from the assistant-secretary level on up will have been assigned a permanent bodyguard detail. All the sandbags, machine guns and khaki uniforms that one is beginning to see everywhere in Washington cannot help but raise the consciousness of the public.

Although I’m sure the situation is much less dramatic out in Iowa than it is here, our biggest difficulty is that the public sees us and everything we do only through the media. We are able to make ourselves enough of a nuisance that the media can’t afford to ignore or belittle us, and so they are using the opposite tactic of deluging the public with distortions, half-truths and lies about us. For the last two weeks they’ve been giving us a non-stop roasting, trying to convince everyone that we are the incarnation of evil, a threat to everything decent, noble, and worthwhile.

They have unleashed the full power of the mass media on us; not just the usual biased-news treatment, but long “background” articles in the Sunday supplements, complete with faked photographs of Organization meetings and activities, discussions by “experts” on TV panel shows – everything! Some of the stories they’ve invented about us are really incredible, but I’m afraid the American public is just gullible enough to believe them.

What’s happening now is reminiscent of the media campaign against Hitler and the Germans back in the 1940s: stories about Hitler flying into rages and chewing carpets, phony German plans for the invasion of America, babies being skinned alive to make lampshades and then boiled down into soap, girls kidnapped and sent to Nazi “stud farms.” The Jews convinced the American people that those stories were true, and the result was World War II, with millions of the best of our race butchered – by us – and all of eastern and central Europe turned into a huge, Communist prison camp.

Now it looks very much like the System has again made the deliberate decision to build up a state of war hysteria in the public by representing us as an even bigger threat than we really are. We are the new Germans, and the country is being wound up psychologically to lick us.

Thus, the System is cooperating more fully than we could have imagined in arousing the public’s consciousness of our struggle. What is unnerving about it is my strong suspicion that the top echelons in the System aren’t really that worried about our threat to them and are cynically using us as an excuse for carrying through certain programs of their own, such as the internal-passport program.

Our unit was assigned the general task – right after the FBI bombing – of combating the media in this area by direct action, just as other units were assigned other arms of the System as targets. But it is clear that we can’t win by direct action alone; there are too many of them and too few of us. We must convince a substantial portion of the American people that what we are doing is both necessary and proper.

The latter is a propaganda task, and so far we haven’t been very successful. Units 2 and 6 are primarily responsible for propaganda in the Washington area, and I understand that Unit 6’s people have strewn out tons of leaflets in the streets; Henry picked up one from a sidewalk downtown yesterday. I’m afraid that leaflets alone can’t make much headway against the System’s mass media, though.

Our most spectacular propaganda effort here occurred last Wednesday, and it ended in a major tragedy. The same day our unit blew up the TV station, three men from Unit 6 seized a radio station and began broadcasting a call for the public to join the Organization’s fight to smash the System.

They had pre-recorded their message on tape, and they booby trapped the doors to the station, after locking all the station employees in a supply closet. They intended to make their getaway while the tape was being broadcast, hoping that the police would think they were still inside and would lay siege to the place with tear gas – thus giving them half an hour or more of air time.

But the police arrived sooner than expected and stormed the station almost immediately, trapping our men inside. Two were shot to death in the ensuing fight, and the third is not expected to live. The Organization’s message was on the air for less than 10 minutes.

Those were the first casualties we’ve suffered here, but they just about wiped out Unit 6. Their survivors, two women and a man, have moved into our place temporarily. With one of their members in the hands of the police, they had to abandon their own headquarters immediately, of course.

With it we lost one of the Organization’s two printing presses in the Washington area, although we were able to clear out most of their printing supplies and lighter equipment. And we gained their pickup truck, which will really be handy if they stay here.

October 28. Last night I had to do the most unpleasant thing that I have been called to do since joining the Organization four years ago. I participated in the execution of a mutineer.

Harry Powell was Unit 5’s leader. Last week, when Washington Field Command gave his unit the assignment of assassinating two of the most obnoxious and outspoken advocates of racial mixing in this area – a priest and a rabbi, coauthors of a widely publicized petition to Congress requesting special tax advantages for racially mixed married couples – Powell refused the assignment. He sent a message back to WFC saying that he was opposed to the further use of violence and that his unit would not participate in any acts of terrorism.

He was immediately placed under arrest, and yesterday one representative from each unit under WFC – including Unit 5 – was summoned to judge him. Unit 10 was not able to send anyone, and so 11 members – eight men and three women – met with an officer from WFC in the basement storeroom of a gift shop owned by one of our “legals.” I was Unit 1’s representative.

The officer from WFC stated the case against Powell very briefly. The Unit 5 representative then confirmed the facts: Powell had not only refused to obey the assassination order, but he had instructed the members of his unit not to obey either. Fortunately, they had not allowed themselves to be subverted by him.

Powell was then given an opportunity to speak in his behalf. He did so for more than two hours, interrupted occasionally by a question from one of us. What he said really shook me, but it made our decision easier for all of us, I am sure.

Harry Powell was, in essence, a “responsible conservative.” The fact that he was not only a member of the Organization but had become a unit leader reflects more on the Organization than it does on him. His basic complaint was that all our acts of terror against the System were only making things worse by “provoking” the System into taking more and more repressive measures.

Well, of course, we all understood that! Or, at least, I thought we all understood it. Apparently Powell didn’t. That is, he didn’t understand that one of the major purposes of political terror, always and everywhere, is to force the authorities to take reprisals and to become more repressive, thus alienating a portion of the population and generating sympathy for the terrorists. And the other purpose is to create unrest by destroying the population’s sense of security and their belief in the invincibility of the government.

As Powell continued talking, it became clearer and clearer that he was a conservative, not a revolutionary. He talked as if the whole purpose of the Organization were to force the System to institute certain reforms, rather than to destroy the System, root and branch, and build something radically and fundamentally different in its place.

Can this man be trusted?

By Hossein Jelveh

presstv.com

Former U. S. President Barack Obama would often remark after securing a nuclear deal with Iran that the agreement “is not built on trust, it is built on verification.” He would repeatedly invoke the strong verification regimes in the deal to argue that Washington was not putting its trust in Tehran.

Iran was no less clear on the matter. In fact, the idea to take the deal to the United Nations Security Council to have it enshrined in a legally-binding resolution may have been Iranian Foreign Minister Javad Zarif’s idea. If the verification regimes that President Obama talked about were the U. S.’s way of ensuring Iranian compliance, the endorsement of the deal at the UNSC – by all 15 members, including America – was obviously reassurance to Iran that non-compliance by other parties would carry some form of a price.

The question of trust – or lack thereof – was central for a reason. Iran and the U. S. had been each other’s main adversaries for almost four decades. Short of war, the U. S. had exploited every tool to harm Iran one way or another. For the Islamic Republic, the U. S. continued to be “the Great Satan.”

But countries make sober calculations about when to talk to whom, and whether to talk at all. And if you looked more closely, Iran and the U. S. had trusted each other at a very basic level – by agreeing to talk to one another in the first place. They might not have admitted it, but once they sat down to make the deal, once they made the deal, Iran and the U. S. had trusted each other at that basic degree.

If Iran and the U. S. had Kelvin zero confidence that talking to the other party was the right thing to do at the time, and if they were adequately convinced that their interlocutor was too intransigent to expect a deal with, why did they bother to talk at all?

Why questions of the past matter again now: the case of the Iran deal

When Iran negotiated the nuclear deal with the U. S., it negotiated with President Obama’s administration, which by and large adhered to its contractual commitments to Iran. When political novice Donald Trump became America’s president, he started an official, unabashed campaign of bashing the deal even while he grudgingly kept

He was opposed to the System because it taxed his business too heavily. (He had owned a hardware store before we were forced underground.) He was opposed to the System’s permissiveness with Blacks, because crime and rioting were bad for business. He was opposed to the System’s confiscation of firearms, because he felt he needed a gun for personal security. His were the motivations of a libertarian, the sort of self-centered individual who sees the basic evil in government as a limitation on free enterprise.

Someone asked him whether he had forgotten what the Organization has repeated over and over, namely, that our struggle is to secure the future of our race, and that the issue of individual freedom is subordinate to that one, overwhelming purpose. His retort was that the Organization’s violent tactics are benefiting neither our race nor individual freedom.

This answer proved again that he didn’t really understand what we are trying to do. His initial approval of the use of force against the System was based on the naive assumption that, by God, we’ll show those bastards! When the System, instead of backing down, began tightening the screws even faster, he decided that our policy of terrorism is counter-productive.

He simply could not accept the fact that the path to our goal cannot be a retracing of our course to some earlier stage in our history, but must instead be an overcoming of the present and a forging ahead into the future – with us choosing the direction instead of the System. Until we have torn the rudder out of its grasp and thrown the System overboard, the ship of State will go careening on its hazardous way. There will be no stopping, no going back. Since we are already among rocks and shoals, we are bound to get scraped up pretty badly before we find any clear sailing.

Maybe he was right that our tactics are wrong; the reaction of the people will eventually answer that question. But his whole attitude, his whole orientation was wrong. As I listened to Powell I was reminded of the late-19th century writer, Brooks Adams, and his division of the human race into two classes: spiritual man and economic man. Powell was the epitome of economic man.

Ideologies, ultimate purposes, the fundamental contradiction between the System’s world view and ours – all these things had no meaning for him. He regarded the Organization’s philosophy as just so much ideological flypaper designed to catch recruits for us. He saw our struggle against the System as a contest for power and nothing more. If we could not whip them, then we should try to force them to compromise with us.

negotiated to monitor a nuclear program” – has in report after report verified full Iranian compliance.

You would not expect the CIA chief to strike a diagonally opposite note unless you know he has a political agenda and no interest in facts.

But facts are stubborn things. And if you disregard them for political reasons, you look deceitful and unreliable.

Tillerson and U. S. Defense Secretary Jim Mattis have often been portrayed in the U. S. media as counterweights to President Trump’s most impulsive behavior, including on the Iran deal. Both Tillerson and Mattis are known to have opposed a U. S. withdrawal from the agreement with the Islamic Republic, taking a different line than that of their boss. (Trump referenced that difference of opinion as a reason why he dismissed Tillerson. “When you look at the Iran deal,” the U. S. president said, “I think it’s terrible. I guess he (Tillerson) thought it was OK.”)

The USraeli agenda

But now that Tillerson is out, Trump and Pompeo, with whom Trump believes he has “a very similar thought process,” may carry a more hawkish weight than Mattis may be able to check on his own. That means they may be able to argue more strongly in opposition to the deal and may eventually pull the U. S. out despite international pressure not to do so.

Add to this the likelihood that another Iran hawk may be about to join President Trump’s national security team: John Bolton.

True, President Trump had once rejected Bolton for a White House job because – believe it or not – he didn’t like Bolton’s mustache. But former President George W.

I wondered how many others in the Organization thought the way Powell did, and I shuddered. We have been forced to grow too quickly. There has not been sufficient time to develop in all our people the essentially religious attitude toward our purpose and our doctrines which would have prevented the Powell incident by screening him out early.

As it was, we had no real choice in deciding Powell’s fate. There was not only his disobedience to consider, but also the fact that he had revealed himself to be fundamentally unreliable. To have one of us – and a unit leader, at that – talking openly to other members about trying to find a way to compromise with the System, with the war just beginning....

There was only one way to deal with such a situation.

The eight male members present drew straws, and three of us, including me, ended up on the execution squad. When Powell realized that he was going to be killed, he tried to make a break. We tied his hands and feet, and then we had to gag him when he began shouting. We drove him to a wooded area off the highway about 10 miles south of Washington, shot him, and buried him.

I got back a little after midnight, but I still haven’t been able to get to sleep. I am very, very depressed.

Bush’s ambassador to the U. N. may once again be headed to the White House and for a top job as President Trump’s new national security adviser. Bolton reportedly visited the White House on March 6 in a meeting that has been described as more like a job interview.

Every indication, thus, is that the U. S. may be heading toward a unilateral withdrawal from the Iran deal – a move that would be in contravention of not only the deal itself but also the Security Council resolution, as well as an affront to America’s European allies who have been strongly advising it against withdrawal.

Iran, meanwhile, has long been prepared for that eventuality; and may have already made its peace with it. On March 14, Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister and nuclear negotiator Abbas Araqchi said Iran had notified Europe that if the U. S. withdraws from the Iran deal, so will Iran.

WMD-armed West to welch?

That would perhaps be best for all. The Iran deal is a complex, highly technical deal that took 22 months to negotiate. If one party suddenly wishes to renege on its obligations and sabotage implementation of obligations by other parties, there had better be no deal to implement at all.

Egypt’s sham election: Made in the USA?

Several would-be contenders for the presidency were arrested shortly after they declared plans to oppose Sisi, who, in the lead-up to voting, by totalitarian measures ensured a singular media narrative.

The Associated Press had reported that the Sisi government delivered “guidelines” preventing news outlets from conducting polls about the election or asking whom Egyptians would vote for. The report also noted that critical television journalists had been “removed from the air.”

Earlier last month, Sisi gave a televised address wherein saying that he considered defamation of police or army tantamount to treason. Egyptian authorities recently called on Egyptian citizens to report media outlets criticizing the Sisi regime.

Following the arrests of a reporter and a cameraman in Alexandria, more than 20 journalists were behind bars in Egypt, third in the world for imprisoned journalists. Earlier last month, Egypt’s prosecutors said they would seek the death penalty against photojournalist Mohmoud Abu Zeid, also known as “Shawkan.”

Between 2013 and 2017, authorities in Egypt massacred hundreds of unarmed protesters, banned rival political parties and organizations, shut down oppositional television networks and blocked hundreds of news and NGO websites.

As he nominates CIA director and known Iran hawk Mike Pompeo to head the U. S. State Department, dismissing a relatively more moderate voice in former Secretary Rex Tillerson, the Iran deal debate is vigorously rekindled.

Relevant questions have also been raised as reports indicate that North Korea may be willing to strike a deal of its own with the U. S.

Pompeo has been blunt in his public stance on the Iran deal, at times verging on farce. Last July, making up what he thought was a smart simile about Iranian compliance with the nuclear deal, he compared Iran to a bad tenant at a property.

“They don’t pay the rent, you call them, and then they send a check and it doesn’t clear,” Pompeo said. “And then the next day, there’s this tired old sofa in the front yard.”

The only real suspense in Egypt’s upcoming presidential election was how close incumbent Abdel Fattah el-Sisi would get to securing 100 percent of the vote.

The U. N. openly promotes race mixing

According to U. N. High Commissioner for Human Rights Zeid Ra’ad Al Hussein, the statement by the Hungarian prime minister that “we do not support race mixing” is “racist”; however, the overwhelming majority of the Eastern European population supports the Hungarian position.

However, the U. N. High Commissioner for Human Rights refuses to resign over this scandalous statement that he made earlier, openly supporting race mixing, as 444.hu reports.

The populations of Eastern European countries, however, do not support the U. N.’s race theory; months ago, the Eurobarometer poll revealed that the majority of all populations in the region reject this idea of race mixing.

According to the study, 71% to 80% of the populations in Slovakia and the Czech Republic would find it unacceptable if their children were into a relationship with a “dark-skinned person.”

Australia welcomes South Africa’s White victims

While others call for emergency visas to save White farmers facing violent attacks in South Africa, the Jewnighted States prefers Blacks.

rt.com
A top Australian official has called for emergency visas for South Africa’s White farmers, who are reportedly facing rising violence amid government calls for land expropriation in favor of Black citizens.

“If you look at the footage and read the stories, you hear the accounts, it’s a horrific circumstance they face,” said Australian Home Affairs Minister Peter Dutton. “I think these people deserve special attention and we’re certainly applying that special attention now.

“I do think, on the information that I’ve seen, people do need help and they need help from a civilized country like ours,” Dutton said, commenting on a documentary about violent rural crime in South Africa.

South African President Cyril Ramaphosa

The claim followed a wave of stories related to the alleged persecution of White farmers in South Africa after authorities approved new legislation allowing the redistribution of lands owned by White farmers to Black South African citizens. In the predominantly Black population of 50 million people White citizens reportedly own 72 percent of farmland.

Dutton’s call was slammed by South Africa’s Foreign Ministry. “There is no reason for any government anywhere in the world to suspect that any South African is in danger from his own democratically elected government. That threat simply does not exist,” the ministry’s spokesman said in a statement.

South Africa aims to strip land from White farmers

Yet South Africa’s new President Cyril Ramaphosa has pledged to redistribute land by taking it from White farmers and giving it to Black people. But why is the millionaire pursuing such a drastic course of action and how will it work?

How did White farmers get that land in the first place?

Dutch Calvinist settlers first landed on the Cape of Good Hope in 1652 and soon began setting up farms in arable regions around Cape Town. Over the following decades the number of Dutch (and some German and French) settlers grew. They continuously claimed land from the local Khoikhoi until colonizing the entire cape.

The British seized the region in 1795, sparking a long running conflict with the original Dutch settlers, now known as the Boers. To escape British rule the Boers pushed deeper north and northeast, claiming land in the present-day provinces of Free State and Natal. Eventually they established independent Boer republics.

Numerous wars and conflicts between colonists, both British and Boer, and local people including the Xhosa, Zulu, Basotho and Ndebele broke out over the intervening years, particularly as gold and diamonds were discovered. The colonists took advantage of their superior weaponry to claim further territories.

Eventually tensions between the Boers and the British boiled over, resulting in two Anglo-Boer wars. In the aftermath of the second war the British unified the colonies into a single country called the Union of South Africa.

The country’s 1913 Natives’ Land Act earmarked only eight percent of the land for Black people. White people, who made up about 20 percent of the population, owned 90 percent of the land. The act set the legal framework for the control of South African land up until the fall of Apartheid in 1991.

Who actually owns the land

The amount of land actually owned by Whites is a contentious and much-debated issue. The statistics remain unclear. Many South African politicians in favor of land reform claim that, in a country of 55 million people, a mere 40,000 White farmers own 80 percent of the country’s agricultural land. However, a study by fact-checking website Africa Check found that the claim isn’t supported by any data set, labeling it incorrect.

Winston Churchill (far right) made prisoner by Boers during the second Boer war.

“Land ownership is still deeply skewed along racial lines, but these figures do not illuminate the current land dispensation,” Professor Cherryl Walker said.

Walker, author of Landmarked: Land Claims and Land Restitution in South Africa, prepared a fact sheet on land distribution for the Institute for Poverty, Land and Agrarian Studies (PLAAS) last year. It revealed that 67 percent of South Africa is used for agriculture and that, while the vast majority of this is indeed owned by White farmers, “small numbers” of Black people with access to capital have managed to acquire land independent of land reform.

Why is the government doing it now?

The African National Congress (ANC), which has ruled South Africa since the fall of apartheid, has long promised reforms to redress racial disparities in land ownership. Despite more than 20 years of ANC rule Whites still own most of South Africa’s land.

Land redistribution was the key talking point ahead of last year’s ANC national conference where Cyril Ramaphosa was chosen to replace Jacob Zuma as party leader. The party appeared deeply divided in the run-up to December’s vote and, while it still dominates the South African political landscape, it had its worst result since 1994 in last year’s local elections.

Just recently the radical left Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF) party, controlling only 25 of the parliament’s 400 seats, brought a motion seeking to change the constitution to allow for land expropriation without compensation. Crucially the move was backed by the ANC, which controls 249 seats, and was passed.

Speaking in parliament, EFF leader Julius Malema said it was “time for justice” on the land issue. “We must ensure that we restore the dignity of our people without compensating the criminals who stole our land,” he said.

The official opposition Democratic Alliance party (DA) has come out against land redistribution. The DA’s Thandeka Mbabama told parliament that the efforts are merely a way to divert attention from the failures of successive ANC-headed governments.

In the Baltic countries, Romania and Hungary, this number is between 51 and 60 percent.

The United Nations therefore wants to jam a race theory down the throats even of populations which, by a clearly democratic majority, want no part of it.

The problem with the U. N. race-mixing initiative is that, unlike in Brazil and other South-American countries where a mixing of the races took place spontaneously over many centuries, the U. N. project is using this sensitive issue with an evil end in mind – the obliteration of indigenous European cultures.

Because the Hungarian government understands the objective of this covert project, that’s why it protests against the initiative – and not because it is “racist.”

How will it be done?

Redistribution moved a step closer after the vote, yet how the process would work in reality remains to be fleshed out by the government. After taking up the presidency, Ramaphosa said expropriating farmlands without compensation will be one of the measures used by government to speed up redistribution.

Zimbabwe all over?

But the new president stressed that the process will be handled properly and not in a “smash and grab” manner. “We will handle it with responsibility. We will handle it in a way that won’t damage our economy, that is not going to damage agricultural production,” he said.

The perils of redistribution are seen in the program carried out by Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe in the late 1990s and early 2000s. The plan saw thousands of White farmers stripped of their lands and, in the years that followed, food production plummeted and the country’s economy collapsed.

Likely referring to their neighbor to the north, Ramaphosa said that “in dealing with this complex matter,” South Africa would not “make the mistakes that others have made.”

Where the occupier demands loyalty from the occupied

Israel’s new “breach of loyalty” bill is yet another sinister attempt to erase the Palestinian identity from Palestine.

By Mariam Barghouti
aljazeera.com

Last month, Palestinians in Jerusalem were hit with yet another travesty. The Israeli parliament ratified a bill that allows the minister of interior to revoke the residency rights of any Palestinian who poses a threat to Israel or, more specifically, is suspected of a “breach of loyalty” to Israel.

purposes. Between the years of 1967 and 2016, Israel has revoked the status of more than 14,500 Palestinian Jerusalemites, despite them having lived there for generations, since before the establishment of the Israeli State.

The new bill, which is a visible consequence of Israel’s being emboldened to take over Jerusalem after Trump recognized the city as the undivided capital of Israel, is not only an attack on the Palestinians of Jerusalem but implicitly acts to further attack Palestinian identity.

Legalizing the Nakba

The ongoing colonization of Palestine does not stop at the displacement of the population. It is also an act to completely erase any sense of Palestine in the land and replace it with an entirely new character. This became more palpable to me when I, a West Bank ID holder, am permitted by Israel the rare access to visit Jerusalem and other cities in historical Palestine such as Haifa, Jaffa and Acre. I always return to Ramallah with a strained mind. The overriding sensation of being a foreign intruder in my ancestral land is a notion that makes it all the more difficult to view peace in the Israeli framework. During the attacks of 1948, Zionist militia would physically and violently remove Palestinians from their homes. Following a similar endeavor, what we are witnessing today is another attack, this time through a less bloody and quieter method: the law. The bill will further accelerate the dispossession of Palestinians from the city through a legal framework that will again forcibly transfer the Palestinian population. It is, in effect, ethnic cleansing by bureaucracy. “Our liberation is not when we gain ‘equal rights’; it is when we are able to roam freely with our heads held high and our voices loud, unapologetically announcing we are Palestinian without a need to show any ‘loyalty’ to our occupier.” You realize that the idea of “peace” for Israel only means that we, Palestinians, are not allowed to live freely as Palestinians, but instead as background noise. This is especially overarching when I visit Yaffa, the city my grandfather grew up in and was forced to flee in 1948. The horrifying erasure of any distinguishing elements of Palestinianism in such cities is acute. Consequently, the Arabic language is stigmatized; our cuisine is now appropriated as Israeli culture, and the label is not even Palestinian but “Israeli Arab.” What remains are fragments of old homes and fleeting chronicles of a generation slowly dying away, taking with them the Palestine that stretched from the river to the sea. Despite all this, the fact that Israel is an

Drug war deadlier than most

By Brian Saady
activistpost.com

While accepting the Nobel Peace Prize in 2016, Colombian President Juan Manuel Santos said, “The manner in which this war against drugs is being waged is equally or perhaps even more harmful than all the wars the world is fighting today, combined.”

The death toll from the drug war is much less than the actual warfare throughout the world. However, his sentiment is quite appropriate because a significant percentage of the world’s violence could be prevented with a flick of a pen by ending the war on drugs.

Prohibition

Imagine if we could essentially eliminate the black market for drug trafficking in Chicago, which has the highest number of gang members and homicides. It’s estimated that up to 80% of the city’s murders are gang-related and one of the main causes of this violence is connected to controlling turf for drug sales.

Violence isn’t as rampant throughout the U. S., but the National Gang Center estimated that 13% of murders in the U. S. are gang related. That falls in line with a similar report by Narco News concluding that 1,100 drug war-related murders occur each year in the U. S. Keep in mind, that figure is fairly conservative due to the lack of full transparency with crime statistics. The U. S. represents the largest market in the world for illegal drugs. Currently, there’s a well-documented opioid crisis, but the U. S. also consumes more cocaine than all of Europe... and by a wide margin. All told, the U. S. illegal drug black market represents a $100 billion annual industry. Although there is a serious black-market violence problem in the U. S., it pales in comparison to the countries that are source and transshipment points of illegal drugs. For example, there were over 29,000 murders in Mexico last year with roughly 33-50% being related to the drug war. That’s not factoring the 30,000 missing persons who are presumed to be dead. The cartels conduct warfare in a brazen manner that is essentially indistinguishable from terrorist groups, such as hanging rival gang members from bridges or publicly putting bounties on corrupt government occupying power is being missed in the discussions about Palestine and Palestinians. No population in its right mind would voluntarily acquiesce to its perpetrator, and they should not be expected to. With this in mind, any act by Palestinians to not abide by Israeli rule and denounce Israeli measures against them is considered a “breach of loyalty” to Israel. It was even deemed illegal by Israel to carry the Palestinian flag at some point. The latest bill is not a defensive measure by Israel, but another strategy to suppress Palestinian defiance to the colonization of their cities. There is no way whereby the occupied can be loyal to their occupiers, a fact the Israeli State is well aware of and is manipulating to use as a reason to further take over and colonize what remains of Jerusalem and its Palestinianism.

Killing the Palestinian

The less obvious effect concealed within the contours of the bill is even more alarming. To top the tangible consequences of revocation of rights from Palestinians, we can also witness a slow killing of Palestinian identity in Jerusalem, through inflicting this fear of being stripped of residency. This bill and other recent endeavors by Israel are reminiscent of the ambitions of American captain Richard H. Pratt about Indigenous Americans when he argued: “kill the Indian in him, and save the man.” Jerusalem is one of the only places officials. Narco money has enabled these organized crime groups to operate with impunity. The latest example of this corruption involves the leader of the Los Rojos gang financing the campaigns of 11 mayoral candidates in exchange for political protection. Bear in mind, this isn’t a matter of simple greed. If these officials don’t take the bribes, they’ll likely be killed. After all, over 100 mayors have been murdered in Mexico since 2006.

All in all, narco money has corrupted every segment of the government necessary to protect their organizations, including police, prisons, judicial and politics. As a matter of fact, Los Zetas have even corrupted the highest levels of government in neighboring countries. The ex-Vice President and former Minister of Interior have been arrested for allegedly accepting bribes of $250,000 and $1.5 million, respectively.

Their cartel is responsible for the worst massacre in Guatemala since the civil war. In 2011, their members beheaded 27 innocent farm workers in search of the ranch owner, whom the cartel suspected of stealing a drug shipment. In large part due to the war on drugs, the four countries immediately south of Mexico (Belize, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador) are listed within the top six highest murder rates in the world. Furthermore, nine out of the top ten are in Latin America or the Caribbean. Likewise, 43 of the 50 cities with the highest murder rates are in Latin America or the Caribbean. Four of the remaining cities are in the continental U. S., i.e., Baltimore, Detroit, New Orleans and St. Louis. Only three cities (South Africa) are not in this hemisphere.

Obviously, there are a variety of factors that contribute violence, notably, extreme poverty. One city on the list (San Juan, Puerto Rico) has had fairly low crime in recent years, but Hurricane Maria brought about much instability to the island. Otherwise, it’s clear that the war on drugs is one of the leading factors to the high violence. Mexico had 12 cities in the top 50, which was the second highest number behind Brazil. It’s important to note, Brazil isn’t a outside the West Bank and Gaza that still visibly clings onto its Palestinian identity. The old city bustles with the sound of old men and women trying to sell their goods in Arabic; there is still a sense of pride in our Arabness and Palestinianess – unlike Haifa, Galilee and other cities that were so violently taken over, where even uttering the word Palestine is now some sort of a revolutionary act. This is the by-product of Israel enforcing over fifty discriminatory laws against Palestinians having Israeli citizenship. This is the malfeasance of Israeli policy: pushing our identities into the corners of our homes in hopes of turning them into mere whispers among trusted friends.

Once more, the newest bill is essentially tasking Palestinians with the illusion of having to make a choice – to either defy these oppressive measures and risk losing their residency and what little rights they may have, or to submit to Israeli rule and forfeit their Palestinianism, assimilating only to be afforded the chance to continue living in this limbo state as foreign visitors in their own city. Neither option serves the Palestinian; it’s either an undignified life of forced assimilation or a cycle of humiliation, dispossession and human rights violations. Our liberation is not when we gain “equal rights.” It is when we are able to roam freely with our heads held high and our voices loud, when unapologetically announcing that we are Palestinian without needing to show any “loyalty” to our occupier.

major source of drug production. However, it has historically been the second largest consumer market of cocaine and it is the leading transshipment point of illegal drugs into Europe, Africa and Asia. That’s evident in the fact that 17 Brazilian cities are in the top 50 global homicide rates. Fourteen of those cities are located near the Pacific Coast, which is prime real estate for drug trafficking.

Outlawry on both sides

This violence isn’t a result of a “soft on crime” approach; the Brazilian government takes the term war on drugs literally. Like Mexico, the military along with the police conduct law enforcement operations and the results are predictable. The Brazilian police kill an average of six people each day. Remarkably, the police are responsible for roughly one out of five murders in Rio de Janeiro, with few being held accountable.

The police in many cases are acting in self-defense. However, the Brazilian government has essentially provided the police with impunity for extrajudicial murder and they operate in a brazen manner. In one video, the police performed a drive-by shooting of two unarmed teenagers. It should also be noted that several of the gangs conduct open warfare against the police. The most gruesome example occurred in Sao Paulo in May of 2006. Over the course of a week, over 150 people were killed after Brazil’s most powerful gang, PCC, launched a wave of attacks against multiple police stations. The police responded by rounding up suspected gang members and executing them in kind.

Narco terrorism

The more that you read about the PCC, along with other criminal organizations, it will likely elicit the term “narco terrorism.” This term was coined in 1982 by President Fernando Belaunde Terry of Peru, which was then and continues to be one of the top cocaine producers in the world.

Peruvian Communist terrorist group Shining Path has been largely funded by “taxing” cocaine traffickers. Those profits have helped them kill approximately 11,000 civilians. Fortunately, Shining Path has drastically dwindled and the organization is substantially less active.

Economic crisis looming? Hungary to repatriate gold

The National Bank of Hungary (MNB) has announced it is bringing home the country’s 100,000 ounces (3 tons) of gold reserves from London.

The decision to repatriate gold reserves, in total worth some 33 billion Hungarian forint ($130 million) was explained as being for safety reasons, in case of a potential geopolitical crisis.

It is also in line with international trends, as storage of gold reserves out of the country is now considered risky by many central banks, including Austrian, German and Dutch regulators. They have recently decided to repatriate their gold reserves.

Alternatives

Hungary’s central bank has been keeping gold reserves since its foundation in 1924. The amount was continuously growing until World War II. The largest amount of gold held was around 65-70 tons at the beginning of the 1970s. The bank then decided to decrease gold reserves to the lowest possible level and invest in sovereign debt instead. In light of the Bretton Woods system’s collapse, the decision was considered safer, more liquid and potentially with higher yields. At the beginning of 2010, the tendency to keep reserves outside the country has changed again and central banks have started to accumulate gold as a potential response to a financial crisis.

The U. S. and Germany are currently the world’s largest holders of gold. Hungary has one of the tiniest amounts of the precious metal compared with other Central European countries. Since 1992, Budapest’s activity has remained steady as the MNB hasn’t bought or sold any of its gold reserves.

Australia accepts White South African farmer refugees

Australian Home Affairs Minister Peter Dutton has announced that he has ordered his department to start investigating how to bring more White South African farmers into Australia on expedited refugee or humanitarian visas following increased anti-White moves by the African State’s government.

Dutton’s bombshell announcement – already rejected by the South African government and bound to have liberals all over the world gnashing their teeth – was made to Australian broadcaster ABC.

Where they’re appreciated

He said that White South African farmers are facing “horrific circumstances” of land seizures and violence, and that he had watched television footage and read articles that convinced him the farmers needed help. He said he had “hope” some of the farmers could be settled in Australia, declaring: “We have the potential to help some of these people that are being persecuted.”

Dutton said he wanted to explore whether the farmers could access visas or humanitarian programs.

“People do need help and they need help from a civilized country like ours,” he added.

“There are existing visa categories where we can accommodate people and we’re just looking at the moment as to what might be feasible. Hopefully we’ll make an announcement in due course.”

Dutton said the farmers could make a contribution to Australian life. “The people we’re talking about want to work hard, they want to contribute to a country like Australia,” he said.

“We want people that want to come here, abide by our laws, integrate into our society, work hard, not lead a life on welfare and I think these people deserve special attention and we’re certainly applying that special attention now.”

Another federal Cabinet minister, Steve Ciobo, agreed the farmers should be given special attention by Australia, arguing the situation in South Africa was “cause for concern.”

Racial realist

“Let’s be frank, if we see in this case – people who are being thrown off their land, being persecuted, I’ve read of people being shot, rapes, all sorts of different things – then I do believe that there’s a role to be played.”

The proposal appears to only be for farmers, which means that it applies to only around perhaps 30,000 people. The vast majority of Whites who are not farmers – and who are equally subjected to rampant criminal violence and corruption which is fast sinking South Africa into typical Third World chaos – are not affected.

U. K. hiding its Mideast arms sales

The NY-DC Axis and its partner across the pond think gun control among law-abiding citizens a good idea – except for, ahem, those who control the biggest guns of all.

A recent report has revealed that the United Kingdom is using secretive licenses to hide the scale of its arms exports to countries with dire human rights records in the Middle East.

The Middle East Eye online news portal said figures compiled by the Campaign Against Arms Trade (CAAT) showed that the use of opaque “open licenses” to approve arms sales to States in the Middle East and North Africa by the U. K. regime has increased by 22 percent.

According to the report, Britain has used the secretive export rules to avoid public scrutiny and hide the value of arms and their quantities.

Arms exports are worth $8.3 billion a year to the U. K. economy.

For those in charge

The MEE said defense firms have used standard open licenses to approve arms sales to the Middle East, valued at more than $4.2 billion since pledges were made by senior ministers to increase U. K. arms exports after the Brexit vote in June 2016.

The figures showed that the number of open arms export licenses increased from 189 to 230 from 2013 to 2017, while the number of individual items approved under these licensees rose to 4,315 from 1,201.

approvals for arms exports, including vital parts for warplanes used in the Saudi aggression on Yemen.

About 14,000 people have been killed since the onset of Saudi Arabia’s military campaign against Yemen in March 2015. Much of the Arabian Peninsula country’s infrastructure, including hospitals, schools and factories, has been reduced to rubble due to the war.

Campaigners further said Britain used open licenses to approve arms sales to the United Arab Emirates, Turkey, Oman, Kuwait, Qatar, Israel, Egypt, Jordan, Bahrain, Algeria and Iraq.

The report said the U. K. used secretive open licenses to export assault rifles to Turkey in 2016 when Ankara intensified its crackdown, as well as acoustic riot control devices to Egypt in 2015.

CAAT voiced concerns over the rise in the use of open licenses, which are difficult to track and not subject to public scrutiny or parliamentary oversight.

“The increase in open licenses should concern everybody. It tells us that the government is making a shady industry even more closed and secretive,” said

China has launched the world’s fastest train service speeding between Beijing and Shanghai.

The new bullet train operating between Shanghai and Beijing has broken the speed record for a passenger service by traveling at 350 kilometers per hour (kph).

The Beijing-Shanghai high-speed railway once again became the world’s fastest train after it being limited to 300 kph six years ago, reports China Daily.

The train, called Fuxing, or rejuvenation in Chinese, offers features such as power outlets, USB ports and free WiFi.

“These trains are so popular that the tickets for today’s services sold out a week ago,” Huang Xin, an official with China Railway Corporation (CR), said recently.

The railway connecting the Chinese capital in the north with the major business hub in the south sees about 100 million passengers a year.

The new train completes the 1,200-its members to stay in South Africa.

Afriforum deputy chief executive Ernst Roets told ABC that “most South Africans would prefer to stay on home soil. We would like to solve the problem in South Africa. So we don’t necessarily think the solution is for everyone to leave the country,” he said.

Andrew Smith, spokesperson for Campaign Against Arms Trade.

“U. K. arms are doing terrible damage in Yemen, so it’s more important than ever that parliament and civil society are given as much information as possible so that the government can be held to account,” he added.

Fabian Hamilton, Labor’s shadow minister for peace, said, “The increases in arms exports to States with questionable human rights records in the Middle East and North Africa must become urgently reviewed. Britain must lead by example, and confront human rights abuses head on.

“Current government policy on this is fundamentally contradictory,” Hamilton added.

“The Beijing-Shanghai high-speed railway was built to the world’s highest standards, and the Fuxing trains were designed to run at a maximum speed of 350 kph. Operating the Fuxing on this route at a speed of 350 kph is without question in terms of safety, reliability, and comfort,” said Lu Dongfu, CR general manager.

China has sold its high-speed trains to Indonesia, Russia, Iran and India, according to the daily.

Developers claim the Fuxing trains can be used in extreme climates, making them more competitive on the global market.

Concerning new Zimbabwe President Emmerson Mnangagwa’s offer to give White Rhodesian refugees 99-year leases to return and take up farming, I say:
(1) Leases aren’t deeds. The Communist government of Zimbabwe still owns the land, and they can take it away from the White people anytime they choose.
(2) To the 4,700 White farmers who’ve made new lives for themselves already in Australia: well done, people. Look forward, not back; move on and remember – the colored people of this world and their Jewish masters are not your friends.
(3) To the 300 White families still living in Zimbabwe, what gives? Do you folks have a death wish? Get the hell out of there!
(4) As for Zimbabwe itself, let it crumble into chaos... just like that other “Black man’s paradise”... the Congo.

OUTLAW COMMON SENSE?
The NRA has as much to do with these shootings as Chrysler has to do with drunken driving! They for many years have been warning local governments of the vulnerability of schools, and that teachers should be armed. There were only two attacks in the last forty years in Israel where the employees are trained and armed. Any suggestions are rapidly rejected by the Democrats if no new gun laws are included. Their only objective is to disarm America.
The NRA and sportsmen have pumped millions into our sporting clubs, parks, forestry and recreational facilities as well as hunting and educational safety classes. Put the blame where it belongs.

WHO WE ARE
It is important that our movement be aware of the distinguishing factors between racially conscious White Americans (us) and other White Americans. The lamestream Whites of today’s society have no right to define who I am as a White American, nor I of them. With that much said, there is a paradigm shift in what type of American I am.
Through a process of informed consent upon reflection of my nature as measured against other White Americans, I’ve clearly defined myself as an Aryan American. You have alluded to the same presence of mind when stating, “...Aryan Brits and Americans against Aryan Germany” (TFF Vol. 20, No. 2, page 24). In light of this distinction, it is important to ask that you make it clear to TFF readers what constitutes an Aryan American. The Folk need to understand that their racial consciousness as White Americans makes them something more than “White” and “American.” This is the first step in securing our existence in the current system of government.

DO IT YOURSELF
With all of the school shootings across America, past and present (18 so far this year!), why on God’s green earth wasn’t someone, even teachers, armed with stun guns, other weapons, bulletproof vests or shields, at least tear gas?
Communities need to realize that more gun laws is not the answer. It could even cause the use of bombs, poison or lethal gas!
Calling the FBI twice about the shooter beforehand obviously is not a solution! (“Good people do not need laws telling them to act responsibly while bad people will find a way around the laws.” This is presumed to be a quote by Plato.)
Also look at how easily the shooter got away and how easily he was arrested. He is an 18-year-old kid with mental issues and whose brain would not fully mature for years to come even without his problems. So, now what? Do we kill all the mentally immature? Or, worse, cage them for life? Let’s secure our own communities, schools, etc., and stop depending on the Hollywood Superman cops.

UNFORGOTTEN
I am writing in response to a reader telling of a Southerner saying that he didn’t realize “damn Yankee” was two separate words until he reached a certain age.
My dad told me of having the exact same experience, to the word. So now I wonder, is this so? Or is this a tease some “good ol’ boys” like to drop on us Yanks?
My father heard this in early 1941. His National Guard unit had been federalized and sent to North Carolina for maneuvers.
He said, as their vehicles passed through a town, women and children would be seen in their doorways – crying and lamenting, “The Yankees are coming!” Well, they were the 26th “Yankee” Division.
In 1941 the war and Reconstruction were just as much a living memory as World WAR II is to us today.
The 26th Signal Company (dad) went to Guadalcanal in 1942. The 26th Division fought at the Battle of the Bulge.

HERO AT REST
It is with great sadness that I share with you the news of the death of my father, Ernest W. Foust (90 years) on 19 February 2018.
Even while serving in WWII, he knew that he was on the wrong side of history. Upon returning home, he began to educate; and never ceased.
At the age of 56, Zog incarcerated him 8 years on trumped-up charges: “Conspiracy to injure and impede an IRS agent in the collection of taxes.” Having lost his family, home and business, he spent every waking hour in the law library. Blessed with a high intelligence and an almost photographic memory, never faltering, he was a patriotic force to be reckoned with.

APARTHEID
Not all White people have the interests of Whites at heart. There are Whites who detest Whites, the Why Can’t We All Get Along crowd, the “universal brotherhood of man” types – all race traitors. Then there are the P. C. Whites: Whites that agree with us, but fear to speak out due to the expected repercussions, or because out-and-out too cowardly to stand up for their true beliefs. What we have here, you see, is a clear line of demarcation among our race revealing whether or not one is racially conscious. The Movement needs to be defined based on this distinction which sets us apart from other Whites.

Investigating the investigators

By Olaf Childress
editor@firstfreedom.net

Country wisdom beats city slickerism almost any old time, the latter’s conceits notwithstanding. Very little we can do for those who feel so far above the racial realist as to absurdly call him a “supremacist” while his would-be superiors lounge aimlessly until their straw bosses, i.e., media munchkins, tell them third-hand where the next rumble will be and how an illegal alien should spell “No Nazis in Knoxville.”

Following Dylan Roof’s shooting up of a Black church assembly in 2015, we have seen almost three years of the mediacracy’s lionizing government officials, antifas and BLMers who desecrate monuments “not to heroes but former slave owners.” When shall such “journalists” quote historians delving back more than three centuries into the days of rum and roses when Africans enslaved and forced those captives aboard typically Jewish-owned vessels sailing for Rhode Island, Massachusetts or wherever some Caribbean market offered a greater return on investment?

The 2018 nod

That cabal, since its Dylan Roof express no longer lures simpletons aboard today’s enslavement train, is today signaling all its straw bosses to switch tracks, targeting the rest of us. A ticket costs your guns; keep those Federal Reserve notes for playing Monopoly while passing time to wherever the munchkins believe today’s road show is traveling.

Did you know, wonders a certain “14th paragraph” digressor, that American youth are being programmed to kill?

“In the wake of the Valentine’s Day shooting at a Broward County, Florida, high school a familiar cry has emerged: Often, when a school shooting has taken place there is a certain segment of society that will blame the guns instead of what the perpetrator was feeding on. But, some in the State of Florida are blaming this tragedy on violent video games and other forms of media. Florida State lawmaker Jared Moskowitz made the connection the day after the shooting, saying the gunman ‘was prepared to pick off students like it’s a video game.’ Mr. Moskowitz hit the nail on the head!

“A few months ago I was with my wife at the local library. To my right were two young boys (Black and White) about 13 years old playing a video game called Roblox Phantom Forces. Both boys were deeply engaged in the game in which they were using the same AR-15 type weapon Nikolas Cruz had used to kill 17 people on Valentines Day in Parkland, Florida. They would brag nearly every time they shot the enemy. ‘I blew his head off’ they would say rejoicing. My wife and I were at the library for over an hour, so these boys had to be playing this violent video game for at least two hours.

“This encounter took place soon after the Las Vegas massacre in which 58 people were slaughtered by a lone gunman. So, watching these two young boys being programmed to kill so deeply disturbed me, I stood up and took a picture of them with my cell phone. I then went and told the librarian what was taking place at the computer station. But he told me there was nothing he could do about it. He said, ‘I’m not the library god.’

“In January, after two students were killed and many others wounded by a 15-year-old shooter in Benton, Kentucky, the State’s governor criticized popular culture, telling reporters, ‘We can’t celebrate death in video games, celebrate death in movies, celebrate death in musical lyrics and remove any sense of morality and sense of higher authority and then expect that things like this are not going to happen.’

“Unfortunately, the Kentucky governor’s reasoning is scoffed at by today’s so-called experts in criminal behavior. They would rather believe the Supreme Court that ruled back in 2011 that research did not find a clear connection between violent video games and aggressive behavior. And in 2017 the Media Psychology and Technology division of the American Psychological Association released a statement suggesting reporters and policymakers cease linking mass shootings to violent media, given the lack of evidence for a link.

Sinister agenda

“Guns have always been legal in America, but mass shootings in public schools started less than 30 years ago. Therefore, this tells us that guns are not the problem. But, don’t expect the gun-grabbers in Washington D.C. such as Dianne Feinstein and others of her ilk to admit that. They are all part of the American Communist agenda to destroy the Second Amendment.

“No doubt, that agenda includes violent movies and video games produced by Communist movie producers entrenched in Hollywood. These evildoers are causing the problem and eventually our politicians will come up with the solution to the problem. That solution is: seize vital (semi-automatic) firearms from the American people and leave them helpless.

“Final comment: There is no doubt, that the student protests taking place across the country demanding more gun control is all being organized and financed by Communist moneymen hiding in the shadows. They are using these young people to advance their agenda to destroy the Second Amendment. If the American people allow this to happen, we will all then become slaves to Satan’s chosen people.”

Good analysis thus far

But then he jumps to many disconnected ramblings from the New Testament which have little bearing on the subject at hand, confusing and turning off students who, in all ages not unlike their mentors, imagine themselves revolutionaries, the lucifers of a new dawn. No, lords, media munchkins and children: you aren’t teaching the rural obstructionist a thing; he’ll stick with older truths knowing his guns will keep him free.

Except for insurance target practice and sports hunting, you don’t need a gun. But, inasmuch as your survival may depend on having one, our next consideration is: how do we capture the attention of all these “progressives” distracted by video games, compelled to attend “holocaust” classes or hear Morris Disease “Teaching Tolerance” for everything that’s on board his Southern Puberty Lechery Center’s Le Grand Tour De L’sewer?

The new alternate media exposing such charlatans know with old guard certainty: we shall never teach the world to sing in perfect harmony – horror of horrors, true diversity’s death song – so let’s stay on the likelier pathways toward opportunities that each new challenge offers in recompense for well-performed duties.

While TFF prays daily and struggles to arrive at one million hardcopy subscribers, its smallest light in blackest night gleams terribly bright. But let’s not become overly optimistic about liberating dumbed-down, “multicultural” students from the cage into which their mentors browbeat them. Either that youngster is a faithful convert simply in denial of racial reality’s omnipresence, or open to the facts and worth our bother. Though the “mainstream” media continue folding even as these alternate tabloids are growing, it’s still much too early for our comparatively meager resources to capture space on a university’s news rack, or time before its microphone.

Space and time

But we can have a go at introducing any open-minded enthusiast into whose hands TFF might come by posing yet again this age-old riddle. It asks us simply to think. Which came first, the chicken or the egg? An evolutionary process, obviously there couldn’t be one without the other, so who or what hatched our explorable cosmos? A beginning wisdom admits its ignorance as to the limits of time and space; discovery beckons whoever would decipher today’s enigma. Creation lies beyond human ken, so let’s stop “creating” end-station ideals and stick with investigating what requires immediate attention – that which all along was a next step waiting to be taken.

We merely procreate. A sperm and egg merge into an idea. Properly nurtured, it becomes the ideal of a certain time, space, species and Nation’s genetic makeup. How fortunate the grateful recipient of all these opportunities for meeting challenges that a “multicultural” slave would sidestep!

Kipling’s Kim followed his “holy one” during the latter’s final days to Nirvana, or perfection. What lies thereafter – nothing? Yet life on Earth, as we can see, continues.

Problem, resolution; evasion, decision; all things spring from their opposites, thus discovery. One who can’t imagine the vast reaches of time and space had best stick with what lies before us. The speed of light in recession limits a telescope’s revelations to the visible cosmos at present. Struggling toward colonizing the Moon and Mars, we Aryans shall meet sufficient challenges on the way even without “diversified” crews. Therefore let’s not jump too swiftly and far ahead of ourselves in the realization that such accomplishments reward us only with further ideas.

Regarding which, super computers pass into acceptance without much more human reflection than a zoo’s ape receiving from its keeper that first banana. The wonder of discovery, insofar as casual observation can tell, delights both giver and recipient, perhaps explaining why so many religions reduce God into mere superman, a simple idea given that we now record everything thus far revealed to us on teensy silicone chips. No final answer shall likely appear, and who’s even looking for one besides the browbeaten youngster ranting before some resurrected version of Communism? Such an erroneous concept, untiringly preached by Plato, Marx and media munchkins, we must recognize as a very bad idea – in no way comparable with the ideally mature chicken.

Prayer for guidance by an unimaginably remote Perfection toward which we reach does result in one’s sense of purpose and well-being in the here and now. That egg exists for life’s continuance. As everything throughout history has adapted to its more or less timely and spatial environment’s demands, let this idea sustain us on the way ahead – knowing no past love is ever lost nor a yesterday’s deed undone.

Sorting things out

We become our own worst enemies and best friends. False flaggers who do wars by deception exist for a purpose, i.e., however we use them or they us. The NY-DC Axis “545” hold wet fingers up to discover the lobby’s takes on switching tracks, as that’s their security for keeping connected and reelected, never a thought about whether themselves along with the cabal are headed toward yet another of history’s many great train wrecks.

For those calling the politicians’ signals while considering public opinion infinitely malleable forget when teaching ignorance as strength that their own lusts aren’t the ultimate reality. Like obedient “545 Club” members constrained somewhere between freedom and slavery, a would-be Master Race of “divine gods on this planet… as different from the inferior races as they are from insects,” according to Prime Minister Begin’s boast, enslaves itself even further than the politicians under its thumbscrews when belittling country wisdom.

Today’s White nationalist movement is coming at last to ask, how can we use those telling each other “The masses will lick our feet and serve us as our slaves”? rather than letting them get away with continuing this charade that keeps luring great numbers of misguided people in opposition to racial truths and everybody’s best interest. Rural struggles across the centuries have brought us where we are now. As a harsh winter causes the peaches to blossom, invasions by outsiders having not a clue depend on the mediacracy’s “teaching tolerance,” and those imagining they’re “divine gods” get sappier by the day, can the Creator of this world which encircles the sun be using each of us already in perfect harmony? We “insects” want to know.

Accepting challenges

However, those praying each morning for guidance don’t expect to come upon a final answer, knowing that one who faces what’s out there with the enthusiasm of a mounted rodeo contestant or mailed knight sprung to action, win or lose, comes away more satisfied than any moneychanger’s lackey stooped under a beanie and hoping for “election” into the 545 Club.

Be assured that prayer brings results. If it didn’t, countless churches, cathedrals, mosques and synagogues where rational people gather to pray would not stand in mute testimony thereof. So let us seek only divine guidance, not the sappy, would-be Master Race’s hunger for a finality whose insatiable king demanded of his courtiers: “Find me one truth that stands unchanged forever!” The obedient think tankers came back with with: “This, too, shall pass.”

The triumph of showing up

Exactly. Why shouldn’t we welcome the evolutionary process spurned by so many captive souls preaching one “final” idea or another? Cannot the progeny of history’s turmoils see that what exists today is both the perfection of everything gone before and a vague intuition about discoveries yet waiting for us out there? Though relatively few are the numbers among these White Nations still bursting enthusiastically from the lists to face preposterous lords, peecee politicians, media munchkins and cherubs ten to ninety years old who keep calling for our heads, not one of them dares debate the holohoax with a real truthseeker – making that an Aryan no-show victory by default.

Naturally the would-be Master Race of “divine gods on this planet” isn’t about to give politicians, munchkins or subjugated cherubs anything except fantastic stories. Their billowy claims today before innocent students as jurors hearing only the progeny of hordes having miraculously survived so-called death camps must elicit but one verdict. “Educational” administrators who sit as judges forbid all opposing arguments including plea bargainers who would just mention that so many survivors becoming immediately retired for life on generous reparations benefits should infer German inefficiency compared with Stalin’s and Eisenhower’s postwar killings. Where, in all those documents intercepted at war’s end, is there anything about genocide as a “final” solution? No gas chambers, mass graves?

Ah, those Germans were too efficient to leave forensic, physical evidence behind!
